

LOOKING FOR THE TRAITOR.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Sept. 19.—From the headquarters of the prophet of the Mormon Church there has gone a command to every Mormon home in the world to find the traitor who has betrayed the church and through the humble agency of a German photographer desecrated the great Mormon Temple and secured photographs of the esoteric interior of that fountain church of worship. The fact that the interior of the temple has been photographed has carried consternation into every Mormon home. The authorities of the church know who he is and have given out his name but they do not know where he is.

SCENE ENACTED AS RUSSIAN PREMIER WAS ATTACKED BY ASSASSIN

Shot Twice by a Lawyer While Attending Performance at Theatre in Kiev.

KIEV, Russia, Sept. 19.—Condition of Premier Stolypin last night was considered a hopeless one. His heart is unable to withstand the strain of internal hemorrhages. The assassin's performance is "in extremis."

KIEV, Sept. 17.—There appears to be grounds for the hope today that P. A. Stolypin, Premier of Russia since July 1, 1906, and one of the strongest officials that the government of the empire has developed in recent years, would for the third time survive the attacks of an assassin. Fired upon at close range, as he sat defenceless in his chair at the municipal theatre, last night, the premier escaped with two wounds, neither of which it is said are necessarily fatal. A detailed statement from the physicians was awaited with anxiety this afternoon, but a despatch sent to the premier's brother, Alexander Stolypin, at St. Petersburg in the early morning stated that the patient's condition was very satisfactory, and the surgeons had not deemed an operation necessary.

Their attractive judgment was that the bullets had wounded the lungs and grazed the liver. The pulse of 70 was recorded.

Following his removal from the playhouse, the wounded man slept for four hours after the first consultation was held. The first intimation of the probable outcome from those in attendance was that the premier had been dangerously wounded, but probably not fatal.

The assassination was attempted under circumstances that lent themselves to a great dramatic scene.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 17.—It is believed that Premier Stolypin will survive the wounds received when he was shot by the lawyer Bogrof during a gala performance at the theatre in Kiev. Telegrams to his brother say that the patient's condition is very satisfactory. The bullet wounded the lungs, and grazed the liver.

The Russian Premier, P. A. Stolypin, was attacked while attending a gala performance at the opera house. He was wounded twice by his assassin. One bullet entered his hand, while the other penetrated the body, grazing the liver, and lodging in the spine.

Emperor Nicholas was present in the theatre at the time. The Premier's assailant was arrested. The two bullets were fired from behind by a lawyer named Bogrof. The audience tried to lynch the assassin. The Minister of Finance, M. Kokovoff, was sitting beside the Premier, at the time of the attack. According to the despatches, after the wounded Premier was removed from the body of the house the audience insisted upon singing the national anthem.

Riev, Sept. 17.—The would be murderer who described himself as a junior member of a firm of lawyers and the son of a well known attorney and wealthy house owner. M. Bogrof chose a moment when attention had been withdrawn from the stage and centered steadily upon his first unexpected move.

The curtain had fallen on the second act, and there was a buzz of conversation throughout the audience, when it was suddenly thrown into a panic. The day should be one of festivities, in which the Emperor Nicholas and others of the Imperial family had personally participated and promised to end most happily. The Opera was a gala performance and the Imperial box was occupied by Emperor Nicholas, the heir apparent, Grand Duke Alexis a youth of seven years, the Emperor's daughters, the Grand Duchess Olga, Tatiana, Maria and Anastasia. In the front row of the pit directly, at the rear of the orchestra, were seated Premier Stolypin and his associates,

The Premier's strength was ebbing last and Professor Rein, who happened to be in the audience, gave first aid to him. Then the Premier was tenderly lifted from his chair and borne from the theatre. As he was carried down the aisle, he witnessed a remarkable demonstration of loyalty, responding to the command of His Majesty, the orchestra, nervously played the national anthem. The curtain rose and the artists, still in the costumes of the opera, fell on their knees and sang the anthem repeating it five times. This did much to restore order and presently the audience which had not been permitted to leave the place joined in a chorus of "God Save the People."

Still standing in front of the Imperial box, the Emperor acknowledged the outburst of loyalty by repeated bows. Then with his family he left the theatre.

Meantime there was the wildest confusion. Bogrof sought to benefit by the tumult and slipped towards an exit, but enraged men were too quick for him and he was seized, thrown to the floor and trampled under foot. For a time it looked as though he would be lynched on the spot despite the Emperor's presence, but the police succeeded in controlling the situation and gave Bogrof the protection of a prisoner.

In the ministry. The Opera progressed amid frequent applause that swelled to a chorus of approval as the curtain fell on the second act.

In the intermission, that followed, the spectators chatted gaily in suppressed tones as they awaited the occasion dignified by the presence of His Majesty, Premier Stolypin leaning his left arm upon the orchestra fence, had turned his face to the right toward the centre aisle, and was conversing with the minister of war, General Soukhomlinoff around count Polocky. The clock in the auditorium pointed to 11.30 when a young man in evening dress moved down the centre aisle, and attracting attention only because he approached the two ministers and appeared to accost M. Stolypin.

There was a momentary hush in the immediate vicinity as curious eyes were turned towards the intruder. It was but a second later when like a flash he drew a revolver from his coat and emptied it seemingly point blank at M. Stolypin. As the report of the shots crashed through the house, there was a wild cry from the spectators who rose to their feet simultaneously many of the women immediately sinking to their chairs fainting. The crowd seemed panic stricken Emperor Nicholas, at the first sound of the first explosion, sprang from his chair and stepping to the front of the Imperial box, started in the direction of the wounded quites realizing what had occurred. His Majesty with difficulty controlled his emotions. Turning to the orchestra the Emperor demanded that the National anthem be played.

The coolest figure in the tragedy was that of the wounded Stolypin. He had risked two of the fusilades of bullets. One had entered the right breast and the other right wrist probably as he had raised his arm in natural defence. With great courage he summoned his waning strength and rising faced the imperial box, and gazing steadily up on his Emperor lifted his wounded arm and made the sign of the cross towards His Majesty invoking the divine protection. Then he dropped into his seat and General Soukhomlinoff could assist him, the Premier removed his uniform coat and attempted to examine his injuries.

Meantime there was the wildest confusion. Bogrof sought to benefit by the tumult and slipped towards an exit, but enraged men were too quick for him and he was seized, thrown to the floor and trampled under foot.
