THE CENTRAL GUARDIAN Invasion Menace Not From Tunnel

PARIS, Feb. 1.—It is not the absence of such a tunnel which will protect Great Britain from invasion in the future, said General Taufflieb, a noted French army officer, when asked what he thought of the opposition in England to the building of a tunnel under the English Channel.

"I would be surprised," he continued, "after a war in which British resource solved such infinitely more difficult problems, if the closing of the passage against an invader could not be made certain in the most absolute sense of the word."

General Taufflieb reviewed the well-known suggestion as made in the United Kingdom. The narrow passage might be blown up, it might be filled with gas, and the mouth might be commanded from a distance of probably 200 yards by guns which would blow into sailing anything entering. "It would require," said the general, "200 tons to take through a single army corps and this, without question of ratios and munitions would take a good deal of time."

The general believed, however, that long before the next war, if it comes at all, the tunnel as a factor in the military situation will be recognized to have become wholly negligible.

He believed that 200 aeroplanes carrying powerful explosives might be able to deal as deadly a blow to England as invasion itself. "But in any case," he added, "if the 'K' is an invasion from one or the other side of the Channel, it must be noticed that the military situation will no longer be as easy as, say, in Napoleon's time for guns of the Grande Borne type that bombard Paris from Crouchy and farther, and in the future, the point to an artillery unit of the future would find itself under fire before it was formed."

Cloth Smugglers Reaping Fortunes

HELEN, Feb. 1.—Smugglers are making immense profits by being in the English club for months, said most law customs line to the tailor of Berlin. Their illicit earnings are made possible by the high German import duties on that class of material.

The tailoring establishments are busy in the city, and the smugglers are other ship employees with huge rolls of English tweeds and other fabrics, in one suit pieces, which they have succeeded in purchasing in English ports and bringing in under cover. One of these in regard to New York man, said some cloth dealers are making a regular business of supplying the smuggling trade.

The cloth is sold at one-fourth to one-fifth the price it would cost if the import duty was paid. Tailors are quick to purchase the fabrics. The smugglers often visit foreigners and offer their wares for sale.

The smugglers go quite openly about their business. They may be seen walking the streets with big bundles on their backs. A few of the more venturesome have even offered the goods for sale on the sidewalks, where they find ready buyers.

A French sailor who had been smuggling for several months said he was going to retire from the "game" having made enough money to open a shop of his own in Paris.

tion might be wholly emancipated from it. So they have closed down the Sunday schools, and the parochial schools have been requisitioned. In all the schools, in fact, atheism is taught, and irreligion is a part of the curriculum. Instruction is a part of the school days for youngsters. Their parents may try to imbue them with the old faith when in their homes, but now it is a battle between opposing forces, where before all tendencies were in the same direction. However, all history shows that churches thrive on persecution, and we may be sure that many of the clergy are not less devoted to the faith than Trotsky and Lenin are to Sovietism. The population of the country would have to be exterminated before all the roots of the old belief were torn out.

Here's Wonderful Gift of Mimicry

LONDON, Feb. 1.—It is related of the late Sir John Hare, the famous actor who died in December, that his passion for detail, for the elaboration of a part by business, got him into trouble in his early days. In a performance of "Money" he was cast for the small part, an old member of the club, and had to repeat the words, "Waiter, Snuff-box."

Hare who was then only a lad, gave a detailed delineation of an asthmatic old gentleman who grunted, coughed and did everything except speak. Unfortunately this elaboration delayed the entrance of the principal characters and the irritated manager exclaimed, "But that early power of building up a stage portrait by detail remained with the actor all his life and was one of the chief factors in his style."

In his prime he was able to make this detail so natural that probably very few members of his audience knew he was really acting. It was always assumed that he was an old man.

His chief-fourde-force was in a pair of spectacles. That play was first produced when Hare was in his forty-sixth year.

The two words here contrasted parts enabled Hare to display all his powers of characterization. Benjamin Goldreich, before he wears the wrong spectacles, seemed to create an atmosphere of geniality. His very manner of blowing his nose had individuality. And when he looked through the spectacles of his brother from Sheffield his whole nature changed. His movements were abrupt, nervous and practical. His eyes glinted with suspicion and his voice became hard and dry.

In both parts he had every appearance, without exaggeration, of being an oldish man, with the habits and manner of an old man, although he was well under fifty.

A caricature story is told of his power of presenting old men. At that time he made the acquaintance of Gladstone on the stage. Afterwards they met at a dinner party and Gladstone did not recognize him. On being told the name of the guest he did not know, Gladstone remarked: "Ah, yes! I met his father at the Garrick Theatre."

Sage and Sulphur Darkens Gray Hair

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Restore Color, Gloss and Attractiveness

PRINCE EDWARD
STARTING FRIDAY THIS WEEK
OUR NEW SERIAL

Almost every one knows that Sage and Sulphur, properly compounded brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair, when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago, the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is messy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at a drug store or "Wyneth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, at a small cost.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and attractive.
