SOCIAL GATHERING—A very enjoyable evening was spent at the home of Mrs. Arthur Gaudet, of St. Nicholas, to bid farewell to her niece Miss Celina Gaudet on the eve of her departure for Montreal to join the congregation of Notre Dame. A very large number of friends and relatives were present, which testified to the popularity of the young lady. During the evening Miss Gaudet was presented with a very handsome club bag and umbrella as parting gifts from her friends accompanied by a very appropriate address, to which she replied in a fitting manner. Dainty refreshments were served by the hostess at the close of the evening.

ISLANDER'S GOOD WORK—The Halifax Chronicle says:—J. J. Campbell, of Cardigan North, P. E. I., who is now a guest at the Queen Hotel, Halifax, was in charge of the plastering and stucco work in connection with the Indian School at Shubenacadie and the new Amherst Hospital. Mr. Campbell has had many years experience in this industry, and during the big building boom in Florida had contracts for stucco work on some of the biggest jobs. He has also done contracting work of this character in New York, Newark, N. J., Los Angeles and other parts of the United States. The stucco work in connection with the new Amherst Hospital is regarded by many as the finest of its kind in the Maritime Provinces. It is the class of work known as the California dash job, and the ornamental work is particularly fine. "I believe that Eastern Canada has a real future and that within the next few years real progress will be made," Mr. Campbell informed The Chronicle. He returned to the Maritimes about a year ago after some years absence in the United States. Mr. Campbell feels that there is room in the Maritimes for the introduction of this stucco work in new buildings, and that in the new construction which inevitably must follow the development of this part of Canada, fine stucco work will add much to the architectural beauty of new buildings.

WILL OTTAWA THINK SO?—It appears that Prince Edward Island is the only Province in Canada that cannot boast of a Cabinet Minister of its very own at Ottawa, and the query is being postulated as to why this thing should be. Well (to be generally colloquial) we can be searched for the answer—especially as some Provinces are quite generously provided with the distinguished article. If there is to be a Minister of Fisheries appointed, and if he is to be one versed in the ways of fish, it might not be a bad thing to light on a man who does not dwell a thousand miles or so from the sea. Having recently given a signal proof of his ethical earnestness, by subscribing to the dictum of Dickens' Mr. Stiggins that "All taps is vanities," Prince Edward Island should be well placed for exclaiming, with Little Jack Horner, "What a good boy am I!" Perhaps, like him, it is now going to "pull out a plum."—Toronto Saturday Night.

ness save where the headlights cut their blazing path, grew thicker and more tangled.

Suddenly Joan laughed—a clear, full-toned laugh of sheer amusement. "Funny about Wambley!"

Adele felt a tringe of surprise. Her companion seemed to have the most amazing sources of information.

"What's funny?" she countered.

Joan laughed again. "The way you and Mr. Dale trussed the poor man up and put him in a room in the attic. Oh, dear! But you can't see the joke, of course. Maybe you will someday."

It sounded very mysterious to Adele. Pretending unconcern, she drove doggedly on. The task of guiding the car over the ruts and the long, snarled roots that stretched across the road required nearly all her attention. The headlights glare fell on a tottering sign.

"Only a mile and a half now," Joan announced.

A little tremor, partly trepidation and partly sheer excitement, ran down Adele's back. The road was becoming almost impassable. On the sides rose huge, scowling boulders. The woods looked a little threatening in their shroud of blackness. She set her jaw firmly against the little horde of fears snapping at her nerves.

"That's the spirit," Joan remarked. "There's nothing to be afraid of."

Adele tossed her head in exasperation. Her companion seemed to have an uncanny knack of reading her thoughts.

"You will like Dr. Moffett," Joan assured her. "He has a pleasant, kindly voice, and but I forgot. You have already met him."

A small shiver ran through Adele. What a weird meeting it had been! A voice speaking out of a green illumination!

"Yes, but I didn't see his face."

The other girl regarded her fixedly. "No, and I hope for your sake that you never shall."

Adele stared at her for a moment, and the wheels slithered into a deep rut. "What do you mean?"

Joan laughed nervously. "Dr. Moffett doesn't like to be seen by people. That is, he doesn't like to be seen in his role of Dr. Moffett. In his other role, he doesn't mind. Lots of people have seen him in that other role."

"Have I?" asked Adele after a moment's deep thought.

"Yes, but you didn't imagine he was Dr. Moffett. If you should ever see and recognize him, then—then look out!"

Her voice was edged with a note of dread that gave Adele a faint chill. In her mind she ran over her list of acquaintances. One of them, if her companion were telling the truth, must be Dr. Moffett, but which one? She could think of no one who seemed to fit the role.

"But there isn't much danger of that," Joan went on reassuringly. "Dr. Moffett is too careful."

They fell silent. Adele's thoughts ran a twisted course, but time after time she came back to Joan's warning as to what would happen to any one who should see and recognize Dr. Moffett. It was only a vague hint she had thrown out, but the very vagueness of it caused Adele's imagination to picture it as something horrible.

A light twinkling among the trees made her heart beat a little faster. Another feeling of uneasiness came, but she fought it down. They emerged upon a plain where the growth of woods was less dense, and presently the headlights revealed an iron gate in a tall picket fence.

"Cedar Lawn," said Joan.

Grave Diggers On Strike

NEW YORK, August 7.—Temporary burial of the dead in trenches, reminiscent of war times, was resorted to today, at Calvary Cemetery at Queens, where a week old strike of grave diggers resulted in an accumulation of six hundred bodies.

Under the laws, however, a body must be buried within four days after death, and over the week-end met were placed at work digging three long trenches.

Forty bodies were placed in temporary trenches yesterday, and arrangements made for the burial of 25 more today. It was announced that after settlement of the strike the bodies would be reburied in the family plots.

Efforts to arbitrate the strike, which started shortly after the discharge of a chauffeur, were under way today, between the strikers and members of the cemetery board of trustees.

There are between 600 and 700 men involved. They have demanded recognition of their union and an increase in salary from an average of $24.20 a week to $7 a day with double time on Sundays.
