The Queen Square Corps, under the capable instruction of Mr. Hudson Morrissey and Mr. Leo MacDonald, consists of two rifle, one physical drill and three other platoons, and are confident of upholding the traditional high standing which they have always maintained. this service," the Colonel declared, smiling genially behind his glasses. "You see, the depression seems to have hit most people so badly that they are unable to think of doing anything but mark time. This might be called a challenge flung in the face of Depression. There never was a time when money was more needed; there never was a time when ships, and the experienced men who manage ships, were more easily procured. I decided, in the interest not merely of the company but of the Maritime Provinces and Canada generally, that there never was a better time to spend money advantageously. We may be taking chances on success; but we're game to try. We believe we have a steamship service second to none on the American continent. If the people come to appreciate this fact, our investment will be a success. If we fail, at any rate we've added our little might to combating Old Man Depression."

the document was a clever forgery. The police said the prisoner was a member of an organization, called "Justice and Liberty," which was pledged to violent action. Many of its members had been arrested and condemned, the police added.

The prisoner was quoted as saying he carried the two high explosive bombs for the attempt against Mussolini and the pistol to kill himself. His pockets were loaded with the weapons when he was arrested.

He was believed to have come from Cannes, France, by way of Tivoli, which is near Rome, for his contemplated attack on the Premier. He was arrested in the Piazza Venezia, a public square fronting on Mussolini's office, when he attracted the suspicion of a detective on duty in the square.

A bomb search of a thoroughness rarely seen here was conducted overnight to protect King Victor Emanuel, who this morning reviewed 16,000 troops of the Rome garrison on the anniversary of the Italian constitution. The police did not suspect a plot against the king, but in view of the arrest of Sbardellotto took every precaution.

Premier Mussolini, with the arrest of the would-be assassin vividly in mind, nevertheless faced 10,000 guns this morning as he stood on a balcony just above where Sbardellotto was seized.

Il Duce responded to the enthusiasm of hunters assembled from all over Italy. He greeted them as they stood in a solid mass, with double-barrelled shotguns slung over their shoulders. Any one of them might conceivably have been an assassin.

Premier Mussolini went to Janiculum Hill to unveil a monument to Anita Garibaldi, wife of the great liberator, yesterday morning. He was closely guarded as usual and no untoward incident occurred there.

NEW SOCIALIST

erily, particularly public utility mines and industries. Britons, Americans, Germans and French have large interests here. Investments including the nitrate industry, copper mines and utilities, might be taken over by the new State.

The new Cabinet formed by provisional President Davila last night, after the Junta seized power in a peaceful coup d'etat, is expected to take the oath of office tomorrow. The government then expects to dissolve Congress and convoke as soon as possible a constitutional assembly. It next would call general elections to name deputies, Senators and a constitutional President for the Republic.

Colonel Marmaduke Grove, as Minister of Defense, is likely to be the "strong man" of the country. It was he who led the army air corps and a large number of infantrymen in the march on historic Moneda Palace, official residence of the President.

The establishment of this, Latin America's first Socialist Republic, was hand-written on the political wall many weeks ago. But the sudden seizure of power yesterday startled the country, which had not expected an overturn of the government for some time.

Chile had been gradually swinging to the left with dissatisfaction at the failure of the Montero group to solve the unemployment, trade and financial problems and with the refusal of the Montero cabinet to quit experimenting with the control of foreign exchange.

As far as could be ascertained, the Junta would gather much inspiration from some of the works of Soviet Russia in State control and various other matters, but would mould such ideas to suit Chilean conditions. The Junta, too, might draw on such men as Premier Mussolini of Italy; Adolf Hitler, the Fascist leader of Germany, and Mustapha Kemal Pasha, Nationalist President of Turkey, for ideas as to how to operate the State.

The new cabinet is: General Puga—Interior. Louis Barriga—Foreign Affairs. Dr. Pedro Fajardo—Justice. Alfredo Lagarrigue—Finance. Victor M. Nevarrete—Industry. Carlos A. Martinez—Lands. Col. Marmaduke Grove—Defense. Dr. Oscar Cifuentes—Welfare. Ramon Alvarez—Labor. Eugenio Gonzalez—Education.

The Ministers of Welfare and Education are Communists and the Minister of Lands is a Socialist. The rest are members of various other Chilean parties.

With appointment of the new Cabinet, the Government of Senator Davila, who formerly was Ambassador to Washington, told just what happened in the successful coup.

Various troops gradually joined the movement yesterday morning, and by noon the Junta controlled the situation from its headquarters at El Bosque airport. Then the Junta demanded that President Montero resign and deliver power to it.

The revolutionaries were given to understand that this would be done. In the afternoon former President Arturo Alessandri, who had been a political opponent of President Montero, had an unsuccessful conference with the Junta at the airport. The troops, which had been held back, then were ordered to march on the Palace.

With Colonel Grove at their head, the Junta entered the Palace, went to the second floor, faced President Montero and his Cabinet and demanded compliance with their ultimatum.

President Montero replied that in view of the armed forces having failed to support his Government he had no alternative but to leave, which he did with his Cabinet. The Junta immediately assumed power and appointed Fernando Jaramillo as Governor of Santiago Province.

The Junta assured "social elements" that it desired nothing more than to "grant the poorer classes the health and welfare to which they have a legitimate right as the builders of all riches."

"Different governments in recent years have failed completely," said a manifesto addressed to the nation. The working classes had suffered greatly, it added.

The new regime would solve the problems by organizing the producing forces under the control of the State. The Junta said it intended to build a "better society," giving all activities "an impulse of energy, youth, efficiency and discipline." It called for the public's cooperation "so that no reactionary force may destroy the plan." Credit would be controlled by the State for the benefit of the community to avoid the exploitation of work-
