

SALT RHEUM All Over Her Hands and Between Fingers

Mrs. Walter Misner, Midville Branch, N.S., writes: "I had salt rheum all over my hands, and especially between my fingers. It was impossible for me to put them in water, or do my house work."

After trying medicines and salves, which did me no good, I heard of Burdock Blood Bitters. It was so wonderful, and after taking two bottles I am entirely relieved of my trouble.

MISS BROWN OF X. Y. O.

By E. Philipps Oppenheim (Copyright 1927 by E. Philipps Oppenheim)

"Don't say our 'only' chance," the Princess protested. "Because you failed yourself, I am not going to admit that she's unassailable."

"I have always looked upon human life as entirely sacred," Mr. Pennington observed, remembering his utterances during the war and his discreet absence from any possible scene of action.

"We will leave that to the last resort," the Princess insisted. "I shall go now and make my own little effort. You are not leaving just yet?"

"Not without seeing something more of you, I hope," she smiled. "Alex is a little difficult tonight, but if people will make in reasonable time I think he will make for the club. Take me as far as the studio. The people seem to be thinning out already."

"I fancy your Pole was a little too much for them in the music room," the Princess rejoined indifferently. "There, I see the young woman. You go and make your self agreeable to Alex."

Miss Brown and Frances had drifted momentarily together and were discussing their departure. The Princess turned to the former upon the shoulder with her fan.

"So Mr. Pennington had no luck with you, young lady," she observed. "I enjoyed my conversation with him very much," was the discreet reply.

"I am long as you weren't bored," the Princess murmured. "I hope you two girls aren't thinking of going?"

"I have work in the morning," Miss Brown regretted. "And I have to find my way back to Meadowley some time," Frances sighed.

"One glass of my favorite cup just we three together," the Princess invited, leading the way. "This is a brilliant man—but politicians get on my nerves. They are always in earnest and they can never see any side of a question except their own."

"I am afraid I rather spoiled your evening," Miss Brown said, handing her fan over to him. "Let me make amends for it. Come and have lunch with me tomorrow. I am expecting a very charming competitor who speaks English perfectly—and who never talks politics."

"I am sorry, Miss Brown, but I have work to do all day, and my lunch is a very trifling matter."

"Nonsense!" her hostess exclaimed. "I insist. And Miss Austin must come with you. If you can arrange that, I will take her to the theatre with me. We are going down to hunt on Friday."

"Delightful!" Frances murmured. "It's a hateful train journey. You'll come, won't you, Edith?"

"The Princess is very kind," Miss Brown smiled. "After that came the end of the party so far as the two girls were concerned. They traveled home in a taxi, and Frances was unusually silent."

"Any interesting partners?" Miss Brown roused herself. "No, I hadn't your luck. I had two very hallow youths and an elderly man who puffed all the time and said that my legs were too long. On the whole I should have preferred standing with my wife. What on earth was Mr. Pennington talking to you all the time about?"

There was a single letter waiting for Miss Brown when the two girls reached their room in Shepherd's Market, a letter with a typewritten address and with the name of the bank embossed on the flap of the envelope. Its contents were brief and unilluminating.

The manager presents his compliments to Miss Brown and would be obliged by an immediate call.

MISS BROWN presented herself in due course on the following morning at the offices of the Central Bank. She was ushered at once into the private room, where the manager welcomed her with an air of some relief, took a paper from his desk and passed it to her.

"Is that your signature, Miss Brown?" he asked. She read the few lines written on a plain sheet of paper dated from Shepherd's Market, the former kindly hand bearer the packet deposited with you on November 11.

She shook her head. "A wonderful imitation," she admitted, "but I never wrote it. I was asked with a sudden terror, 'that you have parted with the packet.'"

"The manager hastened to reassure her. 'We compared the signature with your own,' he said, 'and we failed to find the slightest divergence anywhere.'"

"I am not in a position to do that," she said. "Just so. Well, as I was explaining, it seems to me, if you don't mind my saying so, rather a troublesome possession. Since we had it my attention has been called on a great many occasions to the number of suspicious-looking people hanging about the place. Then we've had at least half a dozen self-declared civil engineers call on different pretexts, trying for permission to examine our vaults."

"The last thing in the world we desire," she said, "is to be so disabused. We welcome clients. We welcome business of every sort, and we are always ready to be of any assistance to our customers, but this packet of yours—you wouldn't care to treat me with confidence, I suppose, and tell me what it contains?"

"I am not in a position to do that," she said. "Just so. Well, as I was explaining, it seems to me, if you don't mind my saying so, rather a troublesome possession. ever, as usual to look around and take note of any one who might be following her. There was one young man who seemed to be always at her elbow, and who somehow or other irritated her more than the others. She met his direct gaze as she hesitated upon the pavement, and in her somewhat disturbed state of mind she committed what was for her a foolish action. She walked straight up to him.

"Will you tell me, please," she begged, "why are you continually following me about? Who employs you to do it? What do you want from me?"

The stranger raised his hat. (To Be Continued Tomorrow)

Through the Years—

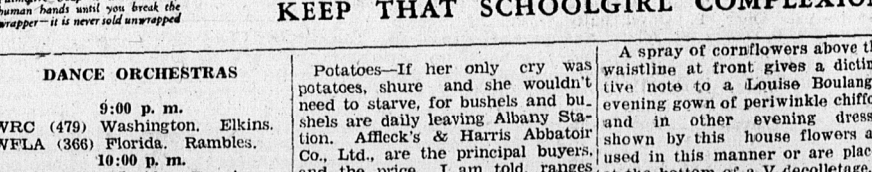

Don't let your youth slip away—start now by preserving it in this simple way that has proved to thousands that one need never be "middle-aged"—Unless she chooses

The art of never growing old is the art of preserving youth in natural ways. Which means, correct skin care every day of one's life. That is the prescription of Youth, according to foremost skin specialists of the day... and the habit of the modern woman. Youth can be preserved. Scores of thousands of women are doing it; scores of them your own acquaintances.

The rule starts with proper cleansing of the skin and pores with bland and gentle soap—with Palmolive and its gentle olive and palm lather used in this way. Do this regularly and particularly at night. Wash your face gently with soothing Palmolive Soap, massaging the lather softly into the skin. Rinse thoroughly, first with warm water, then with cold.

Soap from trees! The only oils in Palmolive Soap are the soothing beauty oils from the olive tree, the African palm, and the coconut palm—and no other fats whatsoever. That is why Palmolive Soap is the natural color that it is—for palm and olive oils, nothing else, give Palmolive its natural green color.

The only secret to Palmolive is its exclusive blend—and that is one of the world's priceless beauty secrets.

Potatoes—If her only cry was potatoes, shure and she wouldn't need to starve, for bushels and bushels are daily leaving Albany Station. Affleck's & Harris Abattoir Co., Ltd., are the principal buyers, and the price, I am told, ranges from 65c to 75c for table potatoes. "So it ain't so bad, after all, is it, Bo?"

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Calbeck, N. Tryon, were visitors to Summerside on Tuesday.

Mr. Wilmot Large, Albany, Mr. and Mrs. S. N. Dawson, N. Tryon, Mr. and Mrs. Morley Mullins and Mr. Arthur Howatt, Tryon, Mr. J. E. Thompson, North Tryon, and Mr. J. P. McInnis, Summerside, were among the visitors to Crapaud on Thursday.

Mrs. T. A. Dawson, North Tryon, returned home from Charlottetown on Saturday morning, after a pleasant visit.

Mr. Geo. Hennessey, Charlottetown, was a passenger by the morning train to Albany, from where he drove to Tryon to visit friends.

Mr. J. P. McInnis, Summerside, was a visitor to Tryon and Crapaud on Thursday. Mr. Reg Thomas is at present visiting friends in Summerside and vicinity. Miss Jessie Chisholm left on Wednesday for Summerside, where she will visit friends. The "Beavers" of Bedeque, passed through Tryon Saturday morning, homeward bound, after a stirring and spectacular battle with the "Unions" of Victoria on Victoria Arena. They were unfortunate, however, having lost the game to the Unions by a 6-0 score. Among the hockey fans attending the Beaver-Union game at Victoria Friday evening were Messrs. Bill Rogerson, Lou. Mabey, Lloyd Howatt, Victor Howatt, Walter Bell, W. A. Pooley, J. Erle Thomson, Charlie Howatt, all of Tryon. There seems to be some rumours of property changing hands in this section, and should it be so, it is only more proof that Tryon is a very busy desirable locality.
