"HOME ON HOLIDAY—Mr. Cyril Freese of H.M.S. Skeena at Halifax is home on leave visiting his parents. Mr. and Mrs. George Freese, Montague. Mr. Freese has many interesting stories to tell of life on shipboard and of the many places of interest visited while on their winter cruise. Over fifteen calls were made one way including Bermuda, Kingston, Jamaica, the Barbos Canal Zone, Panama City, Zaba, Peru, Lima, Peru. Five different calls in Mexico, San Diego, California, Vancouver, B.C., and Esquimalt, B.C. It seems as if it must be rather a tiring holiday for a young man to have the chance to see so much. It is to be regretted that more of the local boys who have left school and who seem to be drifting rather aimlessly do not have the urge to join the navy. Beside the excellent training there is the remunerative side. The chance to lay aside something to give them a start in some other way if they do not wish to continue in the service after they have served the required time. His friends congratulate Mr. Freese on his fine showing.—L."

"PERSONALS

"Thanks, George. You're a real pal."

"I want to be, Mary," he said. "I can't do any harm telling you what I've done. I saw the other evening you had tumbled to what had happened."

"Yes, I did."

"And let me know if he's worried any more, won't you? But I don't think he will be."

"He hasn't got many friends," she said quietly.

"No. But he's got one. I hope it is only friendship," he said doubtfully.

"Don't be silly, George!" she said.

"Still, in spite of everything, he seems a very decent chap."

"In spite of everything," she agreed. "I shall go to the library to-morrow and turn it all up. I'm prepared for a bit of a shock, but I feel certain it's nothing disgraceful."

"Of course. But I'm certain that he wouldn't have done anything mean."

"What about the pictures on Friday?"

"Yes, I think I'd like it, George. You really are an old dear to worry about me at all."

"This business with Ferguson merely makes me fonder of you. I can see that you've noted just as I should have expected you to."

"You haven't acted badly either, George."

And with that she rang off.

but for a moment or so. He seems quiet and, she thought, worried. But that, she knew, might easily have been her imagination. Just before lunch, however, Mr. Mumford was on the phone to the London office and although his name was not mentioned she was certain that he and Mr. Trevone were talking about Ferguson.

"His turning out to be a very useful man," Mumford said, evidently in reply to a question. "I'm not afraid of work for one thing."

That was all for the manager went on to speak of something else. On her way home, after the day's work was finished, Mary Donovan went into the public library again and was soon deep in a file of the "Daily Courier."

Expecting for the girl behind her counter she was alone in the room. At the end of half-an-hour search, suddenly, from the printed page, the picture of Ferguson was looking at her. It was unmistakable. Below the picture she read: "Ferguson, Hallett, who was sentenced at the Old Bailey yesterday to three years' penal servitude in connection with the misappropriation of funds at Messrs. Murray Bros., East Indian Merchants."
