

WOMAN AVOIDS OPERATION

Medicine Which Made Surgeon's Work Unnecessary.

Astoria, N. Y. — "For two years I was feeling ill and took all kinds of tonics. I was getting worse every day. I had chills, my head would ache, I was always tired. I could not walk straight because of the pain in my back and I had pains in my stomach. I went to a doctor and he said I must go under an operation, but I did not go. I read in the paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and told my husband about it. He said 'I know nothing will help me but I will try this.' I found myself improving from the very first bottle, and in two weeks time I was able to sit down and eat a hearty breakfast with my husband, which I had not done for two years. I am now in the best of health and did not have the operation." — Mrs. JOHN A. KOENIG, 502 Flushing Avenue, Astoria, N. Y.

Every one dreads the surgeon's knife and the operating table. Sometimes nothing else will do; but many times doctors say they are necessary when they are not. Let your doctor come to the Pinkham Laboratory, telling how operations were advised and were not performed; or, if performed, did no good, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was used and good health followed.

If you want advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass.

"DISCIPLINE MUST BE MAINTAINED"

Britain's first army to take the field in the war was her professional army; the best-trained army, the most experienced army possessed by any of the belligerents. There was scarcely a man of the first expeditionary force who had not been under fire. Consequently that army did not fail in discipline. In some quarters there is a fear that the first American army may lack discipline, though it will lack no other soldierly quality. Not long ago there was a story current of an American soldier who went to France, and protested loudly that he came to "fight, not to dig holes in the ground." His idea seemed to be that he ought to be permitted to charge against the enemy, disdaining trenches and all other camouflage. This, as was said by the French observer of the charge of the Light Brigade at Balaklava, is "magnificent, but it is not war." American officers, therefore, are trying to have impressed upon American soldiers that they will not be soldiers until they are drilled, and American newspapers are constantly impressing the same lesson. In the Sunday issue of the New York Herald Captain David Fallon, M. C., late of the British and Australian armies, was given a page to explain the "why" of discipline. His remarks, that all soldiers, no matter what their rank, are given orders which they do not see the need of. It is the essence of discipline that these orders be obeyed. "Theirs not to reason why" remains the watchword of the army. It may go against the grain for a recruit to obey blindly an order, but as Captain Fallon remarks, "if a whole army were permitted to have its individual way what would become of the army? Russia is the answer." Superior officers may make mistakes; they have made them. This is no reason why a soldier should conclude that his own conception of the attack is better than that of his superior, for soldiers may make mistakes; they have made them. Real discipline, however, has not the effect of making the men mere machines. On the contrary, it aims to make every lieutenant, every sergeant, corporal and lance-corporal ready to meet an emergency when higher officers have been killed.

The Potsdam Theory

The German system has not been able to achieve this ideal. The British system requires the private to obey; the German system requires him not to think. An incident which shows how the German idea fails is related by Captain Fallon. A Boche battalion which was holding a line near Poelcapette suffered so severely from the British bombardment that it became inhuman when the time came for it to be relieved, and the relieving troops did not appear. When the supporting columns turned up it was found that three companies had gone back without authority, while other companies in the line had killed all their officers and platoon commanders. In other words, when one cog in the machine broke down, the whole mechanism collapsed. Countless instances might be mentioned in which the Germans left to fight in groups without superior officers, or individuals left to shift for themselves, failed to make any sort of showing. When a German company loses its captain and lieutenants it jumps to the conclusion that the war is over. It has been proved over and over again that while the German is a great soldier, he is not a good fighting man.

King and Country

In making discipline in the British armies the King is used. Loyalty to the King and duty to the country are the objects presented to every soldier. In the case of the American army it would be impossible to present loyalty to President Wilson as something worth dying for, especially to a Republican; he will have to go through without any loyal tradition. We speak of the "King's uniform," and to us it means something, and something perhaps a little different from loyalty to one's country. There is something comforting about the idea, a suggestion, maybe, that a man is representing not merely his country, but the first citizen in his country. This, however, is an insignificant detail to those who have not been bred in the tradition. The French armies are fighting for their country and what armies ever fought better. Nevertheless, we cannot pretend that the Russian armies have struck more resounding blows when deprived of the belief that they were fighting for the Czar. As a battler, "Let us die for Kerensky" would be a frost. The Heroic Officers. Soldiers who are told that instant and implicit obedience to orders is as necessary as the possession of a rifle ought to be reminded that the first principle grounded into their officers is that the men are everything, and the officer nothing. No officer is supposed to give his men a task that he will not undertake himself. The Prussian officers drive their men to the advance; the British officers lead them, with no more lethal weapon than a yellow cane. The terrific casualties among British officers show their courage and their sense of their responsibility to set an example to those under them. This, of course, is not a matter to be commented upon; it is a tradition in the British army, and it will become a tradition in the American army, too.

DOCTOR SAYS VINOL IS THE BEST TONIC

Honest Opinion Doctor Gave His Patient

Redford, Ohio.—"I was in a pitiful condition, weak, nervous and run down so I could not do my housework. I had doctored for years and tried everything under the sun. A friend told me about Vinol. I asked my doctor about it, and he replied, 'It certainly is the best medicine that can be had today. I couldn't give you any better.' I took it, and today I am as well and strong as any woman could wish to be, and it was Vinol that saved me." — Mrs. Frank A. Horkey, Ash St., Bedford, Ohio. We guarantee this famous cod liver and iron tonic for all such conditions. E. A. Foster, druggist, Charlotte town. Vinol is sold in Montague by H. J. Mabon, also at the best druggists in all Prince Edward Island towns.

OVER at the battlefield, rolling onward remorselessly, its guns belching forth disaster and death to the enemy, the Tank smashes through all obstacles that bar the way. And here in Canada the Victory Loan brings to every one of us the privilege of helping to crush the Hun with our money. We cannot all serve in the trenches; we cannot all fire a gun or help to man a Tank; but we can all buy Victory Bonds. What of your money? Is it helping to smash through to Victory? The amount of the Victory Bonds you buy is the measure of your fighting power.

Issued by Canada's Victory Loan Committee in co-operation with the Minister of Finance of the Dominion of Canada.
