THE CASE OF THE CARVERS

By Frank Hurbutt O'Hara

(Copyright, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

The pretty little peaches-and-cream wife of Carver dropped her evening paper with a murmur of dainty horror. Carver raised his eyes from the sporting page of his own daily and turned them inquiringly toward the golden-haired vision in pink.

"I think it's perfectly dreadful!" she exclaimed. "Don't you, Dick?"

"Of course. What is it?" he asked, smiling.

"Just to think of a man's being so inconsistent and false and—and cruel," young Mrs. Carver went on.

Carver's smile faded. His eyebrows lifted a trifle. Then he said:

"I don't know what you mean."

He said that aloud. To himself he kept musing, "I wonder—?"

"Didn't you read it?" queried she, indicating with a delicate forefinger an article in the paper. "This Afferton divorce case, you know. Just think—if you can!—of a man's doing anything like that. I don't believe a man could ever have loved a girl and then—Oh, it's shocking! And they hadn't been married a year; were hardly out of their honeymoon—like us, Dick."

Carver shook his head deprecatingly and fidgeted at his smoking jacket and then remarked:

"Who was the other girl? Chorus or—"

"Then you did read it?"

"No—er—why, I—I glanced at the headlines."

The big purple eyes across the table were becoming dim with an opalescent mist.

"Oh-h-h, Dick, Dick!" (Her voice was wavering dangerously.) "Are many men like that? You seem to—Oh, you aren't surprised, you aren't shocked—Dick!"

"Why you silly dear," Carver laughed, jumping to her side and folding her tenderly in his arms. "Nonsense! Why, you just said yourself it was our honeymoon. You don't know how much I love you, girl. I could not begin to tell you. Just this morning I was telling Jack Trent what real happiness was like. Jack seemed sort of down and out with the blues. I told him he ought to get married—ought to get a little wife like mine."

"Jack always wanted me, I guess, even away back when we were children. And he made a game fight, didn't he?"

She laughed softly as she pressed his hand.

"But he didn't get you!" said Carver happily, returning the pressure.

Next morning, as he was being whirled officeward on an L limited, he rehearsed many times the days of his courtship and then the marriage and their honeymoon, and after that, the home life together, and he vowed that he would never even speak to Maizie again. He had just been out for a good time occasionally. He had meant no harm, surely no disloyalty to the pretty little peaches-and-cream wife in the suburbs. But from now on, there was to be no Maizie, no reunions with the boys—nothing.

All day Carver kept thinking of the waiting wife. He left early as possible that afternoon, and after visiting a confectioner for a box of her favorite bitter-sweets and a florist for a bunch of her adored red roses, he was on his way back to her, impatient as he never before had been to clasp her again in his embrace.

He bounded up the steps three at a time. He meant to rush in and surprise her. But the door was locked. His face fell. He had not thought of the possibility of her absence. Doubtless she did not look for him so soon. She never had failed to meet him before. He put down the candy and flowers found his key, unlocked the door. How lonesome the rooms seemed!

He gazed around, wondering somewhat. His eyes fell upon a letter lying on the library table. He picked it up and found it addressed to him in her writing. His brow wrinkled.

"I wonder what the

In a moment his eyes were skimming rapidly over the lines of large, distinct characters. This is what the lines said:

"Dear old Dick: I'm awfully sorry, really I am. You will never know how much it has pained me. But I don't love you. Somehow that sounds blunt and cruel, but it is the truth. I don't suppose I ever loved you, though I used to think I did. Perhaps it was your fiery way of making love that caught me. Anyway, I want you to be happy—oh, very, very happy, Dick! I know I shall be so as soon as we can arrange matters honorably and quietly. I must always have loved Jack, and he, I am sure, has loved me always, though he's been a perfect brick since my marriage and as still as a brick, too. When I am Mrs. Jack Trent, I know I shall be happier and I know you will be just as happy. You men are so inconstant, you know. Good-by, dear boy!"

Carver stood a long time staring dumbly at the note. Then he crumpled it slowly and tossed it from him. There was a newspaper on the table. He saw the headline, "Mrs. Afferton Says Husband Was Unfaithful." Then Carver laughed a dry, mirthless laugh.

He looked wistfully at the love tokens he had brought. Then he turned quickly, with a queer little lump in his throat somewhere and went to the telephone. After a time:

"Yes? Oh, yes; this is Dick, Maizie. Go to the show to-night? All right. By the way, got a box of bittersweets for you. Knew you liked 'em. Uh-huh! And how do red roses strike you? Ha ha! Yes, quite so!"

Had Given Up All Hope of Living.

Heart Trouble Cured by Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

Mrs. Andrew Savoy, Grattan's, N.B., writes:—"In the year 1905, I was taken sick and did not think I could live any length of time. My trouble was with my heart and people told me that nothing could be done for a case like mine. I consulted the very best doctors, but they could do me no good. For seven weeks I could hardly cross the floor. I had no pain, but was so weak nobody in the world can believe how I felt. I had given up all hopes of living and had given my little girl to my sister-in law.

"One day a friend came to see me, and calling me by name said, 'Lizzie, if I were you I would try a dose of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills as they are good for heart trouble.' My husband got me a box, but for two days I was not feeling any better, but on the fourth day my husband said, 'I believe those pills are doing you good.' I was able to say, 'Yes, I feel a good deal better this morning.' He said, 'Well, I will get you another box right away.' I took two boxes and three doses out of the third one, and I was perfectly well and have not been sick since then.

"I will never be without them in my home for God knows if it had not been for Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, I would not have been alive now."

TO HARNESS THE JORDAN.

LONDON, April 19.—A plan for supplying the whole of Palestine with electricity for lighting, heating and cooking purposes is being entered into by a French company, which has its headquarters in Paris. ...

The power will be supplied by the falls of the Jordan, between the waters of Merom and the Lake of Galilee, where the river descends 700 feet. A generating plant will be erected on the west bank of the river, and will be connected with all the chief towns of the country. Some $1,000,000 will be required for the initial expenses.

It is hoped that in five years the works will be paying well.

Pie.

There are many people who never eat bread, but always eat pie, and are healthy. There is scarcely one ingredient in either of these articles that is not in the other, and yet tradition praises bread and condemns pie. As a matter of fact, no longer is pie what it was 50 years ago. The pie which nourished Abraham Lincoln, Ben Franklin, the Adamases, Sam and John; the pie about which Longfellow wrote, which Emerson ate three times a day, pie that was once an inspiration, a symphony, a ripe achievement and the most sacred performance of a patriotic duty, such pie is no longer ate—not even in New England.

American Simplicity.

An American bishop who was visiting in England was greatly amused, not to say annoyed, by the way the Englishmen addressed him. Indeed, he became heartily tired of "Your Grace."

"When I returned to America," the bishop would say afterward, "you can imagine my surprise and delight, too, when one of my friends, standing on the pier, caught a glimpse of me as I waited to descend the gangplank, and called forth to me, 'Hello Bish!'"

GREAT EMACIATION

SLEEPLESSNESS AND NERVOUSNESS CURED.

If the overly thin people knew the danger they run from pneumonia and consumption they would get a move on and try and get fat. It isn't necessary to be thin—even though you were born that way, and the following statement from Miss Laura Ladenburg proves it: "I am a forewoman in a paper box department, and have to make good. To a stranger coming in it looks easy, but it involves a constant strain upon the brain and nerves to keep a lot of operators right up to their best all the time. The first unpleasant symptom was pain at the back of the neck. Sometimes it started early, but usually not until afternoon. It made me fidgety and irritable. My mind would easily become confused. I soon found I couldn't sleep well—had very bad dreams, and my feet were sore in the morning. This did not surprise me, as I had lost appetite, and did not digest well. I grew so thin I became frightened. Medicines didn't seem to help—the doctor said it was 'nerves.' Mother said I must use Ferrozone. It had cured her sister of poverty of the blood and nervousness. I am glad mother knew about Ferrozone, for it built me up well; I didn't lose a day at my work. After the first box my nerves were stronger. I felt brighter, got rid of the pain and sore tired feet. I am a strong, ruddy, happy girl, and give Ferrozone all the praise."

No other tonic contains the nourishment, the fattening, blood-forming properties that are so scientifically combined in Ferrozone. Watch the result of taking one or two Ferrozone Tablets with your meals for a month. You'll be surprised. Fifty cents per box, six for $2.50, at all dealers, or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

Increase Your Crops Mr Farmer

Valuable Hints for Orchardists

It is still a common belief with a large number of people that fruit trees do not require fertilizing. Most trees, even without any special manuring, will give fairly good results for a few years. After exhausting the soil of its available "plant food" a tree is naturally unable to give anything but a small, or even no yield at all, for a year or so, until the supply of plant food ingredients is in some measure restored to the soil. This, no doubt, was the origin of the theory that fruit trees needed a rest every few years. All up-to-date orchardists now recognize the fact that if profitable results are wanted from the orchard, the elements of fertility must be restored to the soil in some form or other. If the tree is supplied with the necessary plant food ingredients, at the proper time and in easily available form, there is no reason why it should not continue to yield abundantly every year. In some seasons of course, unfavorable weather, insect pests and other causes may occasion a partial or even a total failure.

Do You Ask How To Do It? We Will Tell You

To farmers who do not farm systematically this may seem absurd; but to the farmer whose bank account is proof of the profits of fertilizer it will sound sensible.

Don't you know that there is difference in soils? Of course you do---and won't you admit that when certain elements of fertility are lacking, no matter how apparently unimportant they may seem, your crop is a failure.

Well, then don't it seem reasonable that when the lacking elements of fertility can be supplied at a comparatively small cost, without practically any extra labor to apply same, and the crop doubled, don't it seem sensible to apply it? Certainly.

Then it can be mixed to suit any soil. The land is supplied with the lacking "plant food" and the crops doubled. Can any shrewd farmer overlook this chance to increase his products with practically the same amount of labor?

We will supply you with literature, explaining everything about these fertilizers, which contains valuable information. May we send it to you? A card will bring it---merely address ---
