

A VICTORIAN

welcome us to P. E. Island, saying we were a rare credit to the old place.

Friday, May 22nd.—Still in lodgings at the Terrace House. We were to move into a beautiful place called Falconwood, on the 1st June. It is considered the finest in the Island. The house is built of brick, very large and roomy. It is surrounded by a beautiful wood, and the garden is in the front of the windows, full of the grass, and the shore close on the other side, a field only intervening. Certainly we were very much disappointed at first in the appearance of the country. It is extremely flat, and when we arrived the first had only just broken up, the trees were of course leafless, the roads (but they are undesirable) such a sight as to be wretched. Altogether it was a miserable looking place and we really doubted the kind of civilization to be found in Charlottetown. Papa said nothing in the world would induce him to live here, in which we cordially agreed, and had very nearly closed with Mr. Dunlop for our passage home, intending to return to the Island immediately. However, the people all told us it was impossible, new to judge of the Island, and they were so extremely kind. On the way home we met Mr. C., almost the only unmarried man on the Island, indeed I believe there is just one other.

Sunday, May 24th.—Went to Mr. Lloyd's church. The heat was oppressive, as they had forgotten to open the windows.

Monday, May 25th.—Colonel Stewart sent us the last illustrated London News and in it we saw an account of the dreadful wreck of the Martin Luther, an emigrant ship bound for Quebec. She started on Thursday, the 9th of April, the very day that the Captain was detained at the Custom House. We were at anchor in the basin and watched her start. There was a dear little child dressed in a grey hat and blue ribbon leaning over the side. Mr. C. was evidently no lives were lost, except 5 seamen who were on the mast when it was carried overboard. (Look in the paper and you will see the whole account, but don't fancy that a storm is like the picture there given. It bears about as much resemblance to what we encountered as a pea does to a pumpkin.) The waves in that print look like little ripples, but it was in actuality an awful storm, and thank God we owe our safety to our good Captain, who knew it coming and prepared accordingly. Captain McDonald came in for a short time. The vessel sails next week for New Brunswick, where he will take a cargo of timber for Liverpool. We shall feel quite lonely when he goes away, he is almost like one of ourselves.

The Martin Luther had soon fallen a victim to the storm. Sailing with four hundred and ninety-eight passengers on board and a crew of 150 men, she was dismasted by the gale on the following Monday, and was being blown on to the French coast, where she would have been wrecked if she had not fallen in with the Tagus, the Peninsular mail steamer, homeward bound for Southampton. The Admiralty agent on board the Tagus, Lieutenant Cartwright, R.N., managed to get a line over to the helpless Martin Luther and the Tagus towed her into Plymouth.

Wednesday, May 27th.—We went to look at furniture. To our amazement it was at least three times more expensive than in Ireland. The more expensive we should go straight home to Belfast, before we were beggared and would listen to nothing. The very house which delighted her an hour before was now only a great barrack. However, Captain McDonald soon put us all right. He took us to several stores, where we bought very reasonable furniture, but there are several shops coming in loaded with some from America which is always cheap and pretty. The Captain is certainly one of our best friends here. He puts us in the right way of doing everything, which prevents our being beggared, as strange as it may appear, anything we hear and believe only the quarter. It is such a place for gossip, everything is exaggerated and misrepresented, which we find exactly the case. Uncle went to the Governor's ball. He says it was delightful and not at all mixed, so we shall judge for ourselves the next time.

Monday, June 1st.—The longer people live here, the more they like it and we are beginning to enjoy it very much. We are comfortably settled at Falconwood. Jane and I furnished the house, laid the carpets, hung the windows, dug the garden, and did everything with our own hands. We even washed the carriage, and on Saturday when Mamma came the house was all finished, it looked beautiful. In the drawing room the chairs are made like a beautiful kind of cream wood, which looks as if it had been worked in satin wood, most beautiful. We have neither sofa nor curtains on the windows, as we could not get damask here, and Mamma will not send to Ireland for it until she sees if we remain.

This diary-letter conveyed by the faithful Captain McDonald, must have reached its destination about Christmas, as it appears that Isabel arrived once more in Liverpool on December 19th. A postscript shows that Elizabeth's heart was not wholly lost to her new country, for she begs her correspondents to send her a picture of the Jail, Courthouse, or any Belfast building, or any views of the North!

TO PRODUCERS

An effort is being made throughout Canada this year to reduce the number of washed and dirty eggs being marketed. These eggs are having a very harmful effect on markets. The dirty eggs are discoloured in appearance and have the effect of lowering consumption. Washed eggs are even more insidious. Washing destroys the natural protective bloom of the shell and leaves the egg damp so that moulds or other forms of rot often develop. The removal of these irritating causes of the egg trade lies largely with the producer. If each individual producer would take steps to prevent the production of dirty eggs he would be rendering a tremendous service to his industry, one which soon would be reflected in better prices. It is easy to produce clean eggs. Give the hens clean nests in which to lay their eggs and keep plenty of clean dry litter on the floor at all times. This serves as a mat and moves much of the dirt that would otherwise be carried from the runs into the nests. Under any circumstances a few soiled eggs will be produced. These should be culled at home or, if that is not possible, they should be wiped off with a dry cloth or steel wool. UNDER NO CIRCUMSTANCES SHOULD THEY BE WASHED.

Lampshade Skirts

LONDON, May 15 Women are adopting a lampshade skirt for the spring. Instead of keeping the straight, "garcon" all down-like line for their clothes, many women are having alternate frocks with a very low belted jacket and a pleated "lampshade" skirt. The effect of the new mode is to make that of a tall lampshade with the shade slipped down to the waist instead of being at the top of it. This effect is heightened by the RECORD OF PERFORMANCE FOR POULTRY. Last year 252 breeders entered 32,178 birds in the Canadian record of performance for poultry. This is one of the progressive policies of the Dominion Department of Agriculture, inaugurated in the fall of 1919 for the purpose of stimulating the production of pedigreed poultry, and providing a source of high producing females from which might be made available male birds of known breeding for the improvement of poultry flocks on Canadian farms. Of the 32,178 birds entered 31,429 were hatched by R. O. P. inspectors and commenced their year. Of these 3,242 or 10.3 per cent laid 225 eggs more during the year, their eggs averaging two ounces or better, thus securing advanced R. O. P. certificates. Of the remainder 9,044 birds or 28.8 per cent secured the R. O. P. certificate by laying their birds over a 150 egg and under 225, these averaging 2 ounces or better. Of a provincial standard British Columbia with the largest entry, 14,536 birds, had 32 per cent secure R. O. P. and 14.2 per cent advanced R. O. P. certificates. It is interesting to note that the mortality at 6 per cent for this province was the lowest recorded, Ontario with an entry of 10,161 had 23 per cent quality for R. O. P. and 5.8 per cent advanced certificates. In this province the mortality was 8.6 per cent. Of the 11,095 failing to qualify 7,080 or 22.5 per cent could not reach the minimum egg qualification of 150 eggs, and 4,015 or 12.8 per cent did not lay eggs of sufficient weight. The eighth annual report of the record of performance for pure-bred poultry codifiers the names and addresses of the breeders entered, and all particulars regarding their flocks. Those interested may secure copies from the Publications Department of agriculture Ottawa. The rules and regulation governing record of performance for poultry and the duties governing the approval and banding of record of performance cockerets will be found in the report, together with entry blank.

Village Life On Twenty-Eight Cents. LONDON, May 18 Stogumber, in West Somerset is surely the most economical village in England. In the thirty-four years of its existence the Stogumber Parish Council, which looks after the affairs of the village, has had to make only two precept on the local district council. In 1894, the year that the parish council came into being, a precept of $75 was made. This has since been reduced to $11 1/2 per year, with a further precept for the same amount was made, and of this there is a surplus of $63 in hand. They are surprised to find that the annual village expenses have varied between 28 cents and 50 cents. Lately the council have taken to paying the parish clerk, Mr. P. De H. B. a salary, and the clerk's salary is $25, and stationery $3.50, and audit stamp $1.25, making a total of $30, odd. It looks as if the village savings are in some jeopardy, for the meeting seriously discussed going in appliances, something which for some modern fire fighting stogumber does not possess. Prince Edward Fox Netting is made principally for use in the salt-laden air of the Maritime Provinces and is extra heavily galvanized before weaving and after, making each twist in each mesh a brazed and welded immovable joint; every mesh is true to size and strongly woven, while the Netting is further strengthened by extra strands of wire on top, bottom and ends. Every roll has a guaranteed length of 150 feet, and opens out flat and smooth, making a straight non-bagging and non-sagging wall when erected. Write or Wire—Collect—For Samples and Delivered Prices. GALES DAMAGE VESSELS. BOSTON, May 15.—Stories of heart-breaking struggles with wind and waves during the recent North-easterly gales are being brought ashore by members of the crews of several vessels who felt their force. Among the vessels to suffer severe damage was the two-masted, Nova Scotia schooner Bon Homme. Members of her crew, brought ashore by the coast guard, gave a thrilling account of their struggle with bad weather, which began shortly after the Bon Homme cleared from Gloucester for Weymouth, N. S. The schooner was in ballast when the gale struck her and difficult to manage. Soon the head sails were blown to ribbons and the schooner was hoisted in the hope of making out the gale. The Bon Homme sprung a leak and she began to make water so rapidly that the gasoline pumps could not keep it down and the whole crew turned to bailing. They worked night and day while the light vessel tossed about like a chip on the waves. Finally Captain I. Harpell concluded that the only way to save the lives of his crew and his own was to take to the ship's boat and abandon the schooner. Launching the boat was a difficult and dangerous task, but it was at last accomplished. Once out of the schooner, the open boat was driven like a leaf before the gale. However, in less than an hour the collier Absecon picked up the shipwrecked men. Bound for Norfolk, the Absecon wireless to the coast guard to meet them at Vineyard Sound to take off the rescued men. This was done and then the coast guard turned its attention to efforts to locate and salvage if possible the Bon Homme. The schooner represents the entire savings of W. J. Foley and his son, Irving G. Foley of Salmon River, N. S. The elder Foley was aboard when the schooner ran into the gale. Other members of the crew included Charles Comeau, cook; and Fred Thibodeau and Frank Doty, seamen. The Bon Homme was formerly the American schooner Alaska, built at Machias, Me., in 1900. The vessel was purchased by the Foleys in 1927 and placed under the British flag. Another vessel hailing from the Maritime Provinces which ran into difficulties during the gales was the two-masted schooner Charlotte S. She was bound from Belleauve Cove, N. S., to Boston with a cargo of lumber when she encountered a storm off Belleauve Island and was lost about for three days. Captain George Erb said he drifted to Mattinich Rock, where he anchored his vessel and got a jury rig on her which brought him to Rockland, Me. The vessel was found to require only minor repairs, although she lost some of her deck load in the storm.

TO KEEP VEGETABLES FRESH

If lettuce, parsley, water cress, celery or other vegetables which should be crisp have wilted, let them stand in cold water, wrap them in the ice box or, when you have shaken the water out, put them in a cold stone crock in a cool cellar and cover the crock with a plate. They will keep fresh for days with this treatment.
