The meeting opened with the singing of the Institute Ode andthe reading of the Creed. The answering of the roll call with housecleaning hints was quite interesting. Following the reading of the minutes of last meeting and approval of same by the members, the reports of committees were given and the committees re-elected. It was decided that a concert be held in the school in May and the drawing of the lottery for bedspread take place at same. The programme consisted of a guessing contest, solos and a reading. A delightful lunch was served by the hostess and a vote of thanks tendered her for the enjoyable evening spent. It was decided to hold the May meeting in the school, roll call to be answered by whistling a tune or paying five cents. Meeting closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

LONDON, April 11.—Keen discussion was aroused in the recent annual convention of the National Union of Societies for Equal Citizenship by a resolution moved by Mrs. Stocks, calling on the Government to establish a system of family allowances on a cash basis by which purchasing power would be diverted from luxury expenditure to current expenditure on family needs. It was, she said, good for the nation that the standard of living of the mothers and children should be raised. The present economic position would be materialy improved by the steady and widespread consumption of primary necessities.

"Three fallacies are very popular today," she went on. "These are that all saving by investment is a god thing ceonomicaly; that expenditure by public bodies is wasteful; and that all taxation is a burden on industry. The other day a newspaper reported a meeting, addressed by a galaxy of stars, on cutting down national expenditure irrespective of the money was spent on. In another column of the same paper there was an exuberant description of a new very splendid liner, and this was quoted as an example of desirable expenditure.

"Therefore it seems that it is bad to spend money on building schools to keep the children in for another year, but good to spend it on costly liners or on blocks of flats in Park Lane. If a private society were to build a school and do good with it there wolud be commendation. If the Government had built the liner questions would have been asked in Parliament. But it is not the person or public body which incurs the expenditure that matters, but what it is spent on."

A delegate from the Southampton district protested that the building of that great liner gave work to many thousands of people. Mrs. Stocks replied that someone must always suffer when money was diverted, but the money diverted from building a liner might be spent much more usefully elsewhere, and what Southampton had lost Yorkshire and Lancashire might have gained in more valuable constructive works. Money diverted from fluctuating luxury trades could encourage a steady trade in such essentials as food and clothing.

The conference was captivated by the way Mrs. Stocks expounded her theories, but it cheered Miss Frances Sterling when she said, "we feel rather out of our depths here and we have not made the searching study necessary before tackling such a precise statement. I am not saying that Mrs. Stocks is wrong, but that neither you nor I know whether she is right." With a sigh of relief the delegates carried a previous resolution and so shelved the resolution.

OLD FORTRESS UNCOVERED

TRABEN-TRARBACH, (Rhineland), April 14—Excavations which have lasted for a year and a half have disclosed the outlines of the great fortress, "The Montroyal" built in 1686 to 1692 under Louis XIV by Vauban, the noted French military architect, as the strongest fortress of its day. The excavation, which has been carried on by some 2,500 volunteer workers, has trenches. Many of the passages were filled with stalactites such as those found in natural caves.

VETERAN METEOROLOGICAL OFFICER HAS SCALED PEAKS THIRTY YEARS.

(Canadian Press)

BANFF, Alta., April 14—The lure of the unknown "in the ologies" still grips N. B. Sanson, 70-year old government meteorological officer. Thirty years of service in the shadow of the Rockies, during which time he has made fortnightly ascents to the Sulphur mountain, 7,648 feet above sea level, have not dimmed the "discovery obsession" so inherent in this student of atmospheric phenomena.

For 35 years Mr. Sanson, or "N.B." as he is known to friends, has been meteorological officer and curator of Banff Museum. The latter office has necessitated his being conversant with geology, botany, ornithology, entomology and several other ologies, qualifications for which are necessary in suplying information to the many students and specialists who visit Banff each year.

Native of Toronto, "N.B." was appointed to the Banff post in 1896. His duties in the early years were confined mostly to valley level observations. In 1903, however, an observatory was completed atop Sulphur mountain and automatic recording machines were installed by the meteorological department. As the records on the machines require removing every two weeks periodical ascents since that time have remained imperative.

Slow moving snowfields, the last movements and lower parts of snowslides, constitute the chief dangers he has faced. Snowshoeing up a mountain slope requires a certain amount of technique. The steepness of the trail requires high stepping. When this is added to the depth of sinking snow and the weight that falls back on sinking snowshoes, cramps frequently are induced and feet are gripped by a slowly moving snow area. Compressed snow, pushed by hundreds of tons farther up the mountain, grips his legs like a vise. Escape is painful and expert knowledge is require to meet such emergencies. Several times has "N.B." been caught thus.

During a cold snap last winter, prairie air mail pilots reported finding warm air currents at moderately high altitudes. These, reports, at the time, occasioned considerable comment and speculation. Inverse temperatures, however, are quite common in "N.B.'s" records. Many times each winter the observatory machines record higher temperatures than do the valley ones. During the prolonged cold spell of January, 1916, the maximum temperature registered at the observatory was 50 degrees above those registered in the valley and on the prairies. On many occasions during winter ascents he has climbed from sub-zero valley temperatures to springlike chinook breezes on his mountain top.

For some years now "N. B.' has made the same spring vow "No more winter ascents". Each succeeding winter, however, finds him with his pack, snowshoes, ice pick and other equipment, making his periodical ascents regardless of weather conditions There is always a reason for revoking his spring decision—something new to be observed and studied—some new phenomena to be watched, and a new man may not be trusted to do it.

To his intimate friends such explanations are taken with the proverbial grain of salt. They know it is the "discovery obsession," that unquenchable desire to solve nature's riddles, that lures this 70-year old marvel to his aerie on the windswept peak of "Ole Sulphur."

Washington Letter

BY LYLE C. WILSON
United Press Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, April 15 (U. P.) Rumors of an engagement suggest the possibility the capital is about to lose one of its quartet of most interesting women.

The four are Alice Roosevelt Longworth, Mrs. Edward E. Gann, Mrs. Eleanor Patterson and Ruth Hanna McCormick, who reportedly, may wed Albert Gallatin Simms, wealthy Conservative and handsome Republic Representative-at-large from New Mexico.

Mrs. Hoover is First Lady, but not a member of this remarkable quartet each of whom has contributed unexpected and unconventional news to the American public in recent years. News of Mrs. Hoover's activities is very conventional because she and President Hoover prefer that it be so.

Dolly Gann

Mrs. Gann is Vice President Curtis' sister and his officia l hostess. Their home is in a large hotel near the down town section of Washington. Mrs. Longworth is the wife of the Speaker of the House and a personality in her own right. The squabble over precedence engaged in by Mrs. Gann and Mrs. Longworth at the outset of the Hoover administration intrigued nations.

An apparently unfounded report that Alice Roosevelt Longworth's brother, Governor Theodore Roosevelt of Porto Rico, would be the 1932 Vice Presidential running mate of President Hoover has added the latest gossipy chapter to the Gann-Longworth controversy. Persons with no more to do than ponder over such matters have wondered if the resourceful Alice might not be sponsoring brother Theodore for Vice President in order once and for all to settle that question of precedence with Mrs. Gann. Having wondered that they must wonder whether Mrs. Longworth would accord a sister-in-law the precedence she refused to acknowledge to Mr. Curtis' official hostess.

Below the Salt

Former Secretary of State Kellogg would be interested in that. He is now a golfing private citizen, happily in possession of the Nobel Peace Prize. But it was his ruling as Secretary of State that started the fuss over who sits below the salt at official banquets and who sits above.

Mrs. Eleanor Patterson interests Washington because she is the only American woman editor of a metropolitan newspaper—The Washington Herald, owned by William Randolph Hearst. She prints occasional editorials which are not laudatory of Mrs. Longworth. Written thus of her one day, Mrs. Patterson said, "she cannot utter," which meant Mrs. Patterson did not believe Mrs. Longworth was capable of making a political speech. Mrs. Patterson lives in a handsome home on Dupont Circle and once permitted President and Mrs. Coolidge to live there while she was abroad.
