OPPORTUNITY FOR TREASURE HUNTERS

The lure of hidden treasure has for centuries prompted courageous men and women to embark on hazardous and adventurous expeditions to the far corners of the world.

Treasure hunters fire the blood of young and old alike. They kindle our imaginations, we thrill with the adventures, and then, at the end of the story we watch with envious eyes while they carry away the treasure, wishing that we too might have an opportunity of sharing in the invaluable cargo.

Chappell, Limited, one of Sydney's oldest wood-working firms, are superintending the work of digging for treasure supposed to have been buried at Oak Island, Mahone Bay. Many attempts have been made since 1795 to recover this hidden gold, but all were frustrated by tidal waters which rush into the shafts and channels. The treasure lies some one hundred feet below the surface, and the senior member of Chappell's, who engaged in a search for the treasure thirty years ago, is positive that with modern appliances the cache of gold can be reached. There are skeptics who doubt that success will be achieved, but the men behind the venture are confident of success.

The history of Oak Island is fascinating in itself. People ask, why did the oak trees flourish there as they did not in any inland spot? Who could have had so much gold to bury at once time? What engineers devised such a scheme of water protection, a protection that has defeated more than a century of invasion? And the biggest question with the natives, is there a mystic guardian who will never let the treasure be removed?

While the rights to the Oak Island treasure belongs to those who hold the treasure rights, there is golden treasure right close at hand and adventurous volunteers are needed to recover it.

If you are interested in treasure hunting, this is your big opportunity.

PARIS, July 14.—The French fishermen are deserting the Newfoundland banks. They say that the banks are nearly fished out, so they are seeking new and more plentiful seas.

According to what I was told at St. Malo, in a few years time the familiar "dorys" which the traveller to Canada spies bobbing about in the heavy seas as the liner approaches Halifax will have disappeared. This year only ten cod-boats set sail from St. Malo for the Newfoundland coast, compared with fifty and sixty other years.

Later in the season, a fleet of forty vessels are setting out for the coast of Greenland acting on reports received by the French Ministry of Marine that cod are more plentiful and larger in these latitudes. The fleet will fish along the Greenland coast in the Davis Straits from Cape Farewell northwards and, according to calculations, they should make in six weeks catches which will be better than catches made off Newfoundland in four months.

If the venture is successful, the remaining boats which now go to Newfoundland will also transfer their activities to the Greenland coast. In this way it is hoped to bring back prosperity to the fishing colony along the Breton coast, which I am told, has suffered heavily from poor catches in recent years, as well as from terrible losses by storm.

Last year, in the terrific September tempests, scores of coastal fishing craft were lost and 200 fishermen drowned.

fighting corps I note that quite a number of Canadians have served under the Legion's flag in the course of its eventful history. Contemporary records show that there is only one Canadian now in the Legion's ranks, compared with three Americans and about half a dozen British.

The Legion has never "taken" to Anglo-Saxons, to tell the truth. They find they are often intractable to the iron discipline of the corps, they are dissatisfied with the pay of a half-penny a day and they are liable to desert, even at the risk of being summarily shot if recaptured. In the past three years, two Englishmen succeeded in deserting—one from a detachment of the Legion stationed in Syria, the other from Sid-el-Abbes, the Foreign Legion's headquarters in Morocco. One of the deserters was found wandering at Boulogne without sufficient funds to enable him to complete the last lap of the journey home, 21 miles away. He could see the coast of England but could not reach it. He was finally arrested as a vagrant and taken to the police station where it was discovered that his brain had become affected and he was handed over to the British Consul and sent home.

Members of the Legion have themselves told me the life is killing. One must have the makings of a professional soldier to withstand the rigours of the heat and forced marches across the sun-baked North African plains. Germans make the best soldiers for the Legion and now 60 per cent of the rank and file are Germans the remainder being mainly Poles, Russians and French. One regiment of the Legion is serving in Indo-China.

Two young men were walking along the Rue de Rivoli in Paris when, espying one another, they both exclaimed in English, "Why, fancy seeing you here."

Passers-by remarked "two English tourists" and walked on. The two young men are heirs to two kingdoms, because one was the Prince of Wales—this was when he passed through Paris on his way to South America—and the other Prince Leopold, Crown Prince of Belgium.

Like the Prince of Wales, the Belgian Prince loves to make incognito visits to Paris, bringing with him his handsome Swedish wife, Princess Astrid. When the two Princes met, they had been ignorant, each of them, of the visit of the other to France. The Princes are great friends, since they boast of being educated at the same school—Eton. The heir of the Belgian Throne, indeed, talks and looks like an Englishman, since he is fair-haired and in fact is not unlike the Prince of Wales except that he is taller.

When Princess Astrid first came from Sweden to settle down as a Belgian Princess she could not speak the language of the country, but she is now beginning to pick up French and talk it fluently. She and her husband heretofore have always conversed in English, since Prince Leopold does not know Swedish.

Another Prince who comes to Paris, very incognito, is the young Count of Paris, Prince Henri, who is pretender to the throne of France. By law he and members of his family are banished from the country, but the police, I am told, shut their eyes to his very occasional visits.

It must be an occasion for much heart-burning for the young Prince—he is only 22—when he passes by the scenes of so much past royal grandeur and reflects on the glory that might still have been his!

Up to a few years ago half the population of France made their living living from the soil. That is no longer so. The depression in agriculture and the growth of industrialism have each played their part in attracting the country folk to the towns and bigger industrial areas, never to return to the drudgery of the farm.

In the same proportion as the peasantry have migrated to the populous areas, the value of cash of France as an agricultural nation has fallen rapidly. I have seen a report presented to the Ministry of Agriculture which gives facts and figures to show the remarkable change in values.

For example, in 1913 the entire fortune of France as "a going concern" was estimated at 290 millions of pre-war francs. Agriculture was represented in this by a total of 90 milliards—59 1-2 milliards for rural landed property; 10 milliards, 800 millions for agriculture live stock; and millions for buildings; 735 million the balance for material, seeds and so forth.

Statistics for the past few years place the present value of French agriculture of 417 milliards of present day francs, which are worth 83 1-2 milliards of pre-war francs, showing a drop in value of six and a half milliards, or $260,000,000.

Before the war France's agricultural wealth represented 31 per cent of the country's total wealth; now it represents only 27.8 per cent.

MRS. JESSIE CAMERON

At the residence of her son Thomas Cameron, Brudenell, June 20th, Mrs. Jessie Cameron, widow of the late William Alexander Cameron, entered into the rest which awaits the people of God in the 86th year of her age, after a very brief illness of only a few days.

The deceased was a daughter of the late Alexander Kennedy of New Perth, where she lived her entire life.

She was a woman of most commendable qualities, and spent her life in service for others. Her unflinching devotion, and pleasant disposition were qualities of admiration by all who knew her.

Services were conducted at the residence of her son on Monday, June 22nd, by her former pastor Rev. C. E. Armstrong, of Montague, assisted by Rev. Alexander Gibson, of the Presbyterian Church, and Rev. M. Waterworth of the Christian Church. A very large assembly of friends gave evidence to the esteem in which the deceased was held.

Interment took place in Brudenell Cemetery. She leaves to cherish her memory and mourn their sad loss two sons, Thomas and Earl, one brother, Mr. John Kennedy of New Perth, also one sister, Mrs. Alice McDonald of Kingsboro, P. E. I. We cherish her memory, we mourn the loss of a true and devoted friend. We rest with the assurance she possessed through faith in her Lord, looking forward to that day of happy re-union in that great family of God. (Patriot please copy)

WHY IS THIS?—Is the Minister of Public Works showing undue prejudice in Fort Augustus district? The secondary roads have been neglected ever since he took office, but now an election is on, the road machine and many good Liberal heeled are busily engaged improving the secondary roads on which deserving grits are located. For instance, Doyle's Road and Power's Road are being repaired, but McEachern's ignored.

The Great Billetti Troupe of Daredevil High Wire Artists Who Perform Breath-Takers 40 Feet Above the Ground With Sparks Four Ring Circus.

Among the many new and thrilling features with the Sparks Circus this year none exceed in point of interest the famous Billetti Troupe. These daredevils of the high wire, the third generation of a circus family of international eminence, are making their initial bows to American audiences this season.

The Billetti's, who have startled Europe with what is said to be the most hazardous high-wire exhibition ever witnessed, recently added new thrills to their act which fairly take one's breath away. At one time during their astounding performance one of the men balances upon a pole supported between the shoulders of two others who walk nonchalantly across a wire high aloft in the dome of the mammoth main tent.

At another period during the Billetti's thrilling exhibition a member of the troupe calmly rides an ordinary bicycle across the lofty strand of steel while his brother stands upon his shoulders.

These intrepid performers are part of the great international congress of acrobatic talent assembled by the Sparks organization this year. Included in the big show's gigantic program are the original Nelson Family of acrobats, the Aerial Walters, Guice Riding Troupe, Franz Woska, and his two groups of performing lions and tigers, Laverne McLain and her leopards, Viola Hauser, sensational head-balancing trapeze artist, Mile. Rosina, queen of the tight wire, and scores of other world-famed circus stars. Sparks Four Ring Circus will give two exhibitions in Charlottetown on Monday, July 20th.
