LETTER OF SYMPATHY

Mrs. M. S. Matheson of Bradabane recently received the following letter of sympathy from the officer commanding the unit to which her son, Pte. A. S. Matheson was attached, who was killed in action on August 5th.

Headquarters, 14th Canadian Battalion, Royal Montreal Regiment, August 6th, 1917.

Mrs. Matheson, Bradabane, P. E. I., Canada.

Dear Madam:—You have probably heard ere this of the death of 7121132 Pte. A. S. Matheson who met his death while proceeding to the trenches, Aug. 5th. He was given a Christian burial a few miles behind the line today, the Rev. Major Creeggan being the officiating clergyman.

Pte. Matheson was a splendid soldier and I can assure you his loss is sadly felt by all of us, especially his close friends of whom he had many. Canada has lost still another good soldier and all of us a very brave comrade.

As time grows older and peace is again restored I trust the fact of Pte. Matheson who sacrificed all for his King and Country and bravely met a hero's death will somewhat assuage the anguish and grief you have to bear.

To you Madam and to his relatives I extend the heartfelt sympathies of all ranks of the Royal Montreal Regiment.

Yours sincerely, ALLAN POWELL, Major.

for Officer Commanding 14th Canadian Battalion.

BLACK'S Sunnyside

superlative degree, and that the adjective is by no means incorrectly applied to C. J. Dennis, whose little blood "Dorbeen an dthe Sentimental Bloke," (S.B.Gundy, The University Press, Toronto.) is before the reviewer.

Our friends who have no tolerance for slang, especially for the comparatively unknown variety from the Antipodes, may object, but no nature lover who can nose out the real and the real from amidst a world of spinnless replicas of some imaginary idealistic caricature of original man, will dissent severely from that estimate. "Bill" is a man though not above sentimentality. His little book is in its way as masterly in its depicting of the beneficent effect upon the nature of man of "The master passion for a maid," as Tennyson's "Idylls of the King," which is saying a great deal.

It is in its way elementary, going down to the very roots of nature (cultivated to grow in grooves outside of what is considered conventional by the book learned. But it is worth reading for the pure fun of the thing, as well as for the new outlook upon a phase of life it affords.

Here is the account of the wedding:—

It may be necessary to say at the outset that "bonser" is good Australian slang for excellent in the

Yer— wedded— wife? ...O, strike me Will I wot
Take 'er? Doreen? 'E stan's there, arstin me!
As if 'e thort per'as I'd rather not!
Take 'er 'E seemed to think 'er kind was got
Like cigarette cards, fer the arstin' Still,
I does me stunt in this 'ere hitch-in' rot.
An' speaks me piece: "Rightto!" I sez "I wll."
"I will," I sez, An' tho' a joyful shout Come from me bustin' 'eart—I know it did—
Me voice got sorter mangled comin' out,
An' makes me whisper like a frightened kid.
"I will!" I squeaks. An' I'd 'a' give a quid
To 'ad it on the quite, wivout this fuss,
An' orl the starin' crowd that Mar 'ad bid
To see this solim hitchin' up of us.
Doreen an' me! My precious bit o' stuff!
Me own true weddid wife! ...An' we're alone!
She seems so frail, an' me so big an' rough—
I dunno wot this feelin' is that's grown
Inside me 'ere that makes me feel

I own
A thing so tender like I fear to squeeze
Too 'ard fer fear she'd break.....
Then, wiv a groan
I starts to 'ear a coot call, "Tickets, please!"
You could 'a' outed me right on the spot!
I was so rattled when that porter spoke.
Fer, 'struth! them tickets I 'ad fair forgot!
But 'e jist laughs, an' takes it for a joke.
"We must excuse," 'e sez, "new-married folk."
An' I pays up, an' grins, an' blushes red.....
It shows 'ow married life improves a bloke:
If I'd bin single I'd 'a' punched 'is 'ead!
There is a full and necessary glossy, explanatory of unusual words and phrases, though as a rule Australian slang is expressive enough to be easily understood.
