Lady with RED HAIR MIRIAM HOPKINS

CLAUDE RAINS SPECIAL CHRISTMAS UNDER FIRE

MIRIAM HOPKINS SCORES BRILLIANT DRAMATIC HIT

With Miriam Hopkins as the brilliant, red-headed, green-eyed and irascible Mrs. Leslie Carter who had a blazing theatrical success in New York under the direction of Belasco, Warner Bros. studio has delved recklessly into the page-in-an-actress slipper, era of the American theater in the making of a picture called "Lady With Red Hair" which is showing at the Prince Edward today and Thursday.

Mark Twain's play, "Puddinghead Wilson" was the big number of 1896, starring Frank Mayo. With many of these things in mind, Miss Hopkins, Claude Rains (as David Belasco), Laura Hope Crews, Helen Westley and some hundreds of extras as young ladies of fashion, 1890, set the wardrobe department back on its heels at Warner Bros. in Hollywood.

Mrs. Anthony Eden Takes Her "Shift" In Hell's Corner

By WILLIAM W. WHITE LONDON, April 1 (CP) — Tall, dark-haired Beatrice Helen Beckett Eden, the wife of Britain's glamorous foreign secretary, used to practice non-intervention in her husband's official duties, but got his go-ahead to do a job of her own when war came.

difficult job of driving a tea car. She operates her mobile unit through all sorts of weather over all sorts of roads, blitz or no blitz. Almost as tall as her husband, Mrs. Eden was known before the war as a shy, well-bred, ultra smart hostess who kept a house that was "a refuge from political affairs— not merely a social annex to the foreign office."

Out of Retirement "After that experience," she says, "I was tremendously impressed by all I saw of the work that women could do. I determined to help. I spoke to my husband and he urged me to do whatever I could."

Dusty Work Mistress: "Look here, Mary. This chair is covered with dust!" Mary: "Yes, ma'am. I reckon nobody has sat in it lately."

REPUDIATED BY PEOPLE This is Dragisa Cvetkovic who went to Germany and as premier of Yugoslavia signed a submissive treaty with the Axis. He is no longer premier; his government having been overthrown by an angry people.

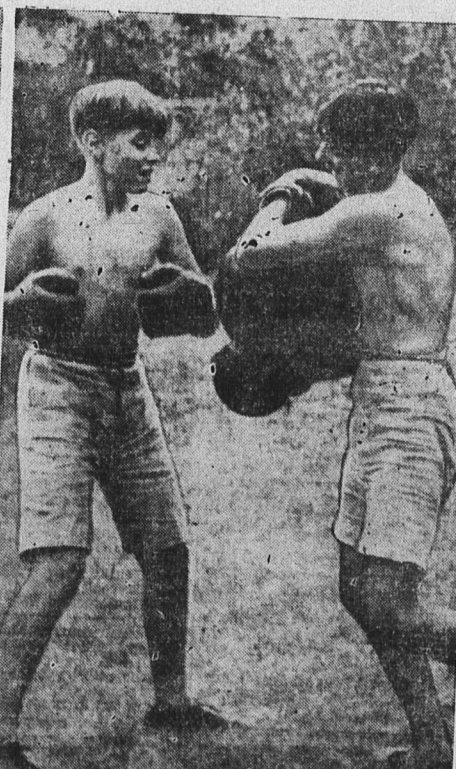

Regent of Yugoslavia, Prince Paul was swept from power with his 17-year-old Peter proclaimed himself king in fact as well as name and loyal Yugoslavs hailed his regime as one which would not yield to Germany.

Yugoslavia informed Germany that fulfillment of the terms of the Axis pact would be "impossible because it would be contrary to the will of the Yugoslav people," high diplomatic circles report. TOP is the nation's boy King Peter, and BOTTOM, General Dusan Simovic premier, who defied Adolf Hitler.

Anti-Nazi Rebellion Echoes Through All Yugoslavia

Through a screen of censorship which cut Yugoslavia from communication with the outside world, came the news that army leaders have overthrown the subservient government which signed a pact with Hitler, and that 17-year-old King Peter had proclaimed himself a monarch in his own right. Queen Marie of Rumania, about the time his father was assassinated on a visit to France. At SECOND LEFT is a picture of Peter at school in England, where he is, and at RIGHT, boxing with his cousin, Prince Alexander.

Incensed at the action of their rulers in bowing to Nazi Germany, the people of Yugoslavia have taken matters into their own hands. The regent, Prince Paul, has been ousted from office and young Prince Peter, II, placed on the throne. A bird's-eye view of the capital city, Belgrade, is shown (LEFT), where angry mobs of pro-Britishers have been demonstrating. The new government has signified its intention to fight Germany if necessary. The nation has a small but efficient army and air force poised and ready for action. Planes like the one shown (CENTRE) before long may be attacking German troops if they attempt to enter the country. The revolution arose in a body when the Yugoslav-Axis pact was about to be signed. The government was threatened with dire recriminations if the country became subservient to Germany. And when the document was signed, the angry populace lost no time in unseating the signatories. Spalate (RIGHT), is one of the centres where rioting broke out with feverish intensity. Civilian clashed with soldiers and police. Casualties were heavy on both sides.
