

THE BRITISH MEDICAL JOURNAL and

BOVRIL

Six pages of this Conservative Journal of Sept 11 last were devoted to the report of a series of scientific experiments made to test the food value of Bovril. The experiments demonstrated that Bovril is a valuable food in itself and that at the same time it is a great aid to digestion.

SPRING ATTRACTIONS AT THE EDEN MUSEE.

A special effort is made at the Eden Musee of New York City, to make the entertainments suitable to the season. For a number of weeks the artists have been arranging spring attractions. These include a number of new figures and groups, as well as a re-arrangement of existing groups. The group of "People Talked About" has a number of new additions and smaller groups representing interesting phases of character have been placed in different parts of the Musee. In the Crypt are a number of reproductions of famous paintings. These have been carefully remodelled. The entire wax collection has never been so complete as it will be during the spring season. A large collection of exclusive moving pictures will be shown hourly after-noon and evening, in the Winter Garden. These pictures show the latest advances made in motion pictures and are far superior to ordinary moving pictures. Among the new pictures are winter scenes in foreign parts of the world, ranging from the arctic regions to the African deserts. Visitors can see as many different pictures as they desire. Afternoon and evening concerts will have special programs which will be unusually interesting.

SANG HIMSELF OUT OF JAIL.

RICHMOND, Ky., March 12-Isaac Lakes sang himself out of jail here when he rendered "On Jordan's Stormy Banks I Stand," before a jury in the Circuit Court room.

He was indicted for disturbing a public by singing too loudly. Several continuances had been granted on account of the absence of the witnesses, so the judge suggested that in lieu of testimony, the jury be allowed to pass judgment on the prisoner's voice. The prisoner acquiesced, and standing in the witness stand he sang with all his might. The jury retired and immediately acquitted the defendant.

TRAVELING STORES.

Portable Shops on Wheels a Curious Feature of Cuban Life.

Among the many interesting things to attract the attention of the tourist in Cuba are the traveling stores, consisting of all sorts of queer vehicles which traverse the city and rural districts.

These portable shops are constructed in an ingenious manner so as to display their wares to the best advantage. Every article used in a household and wearing apparel of all kinds are on sale, and the owner of the wagon, which resembles a department store, boasts that he can supply dry goods and notions of all kinds, from a paper of needles to a ready made gown. The sides of a shop on wheels are made of glass and so arranged as to give them the appearance of a shop window.

Perfumery is one of the leading articles sold in this way, for however poor the natives may be, they always have money enough to purchase colognes and generally the most expensive varieties.

During carnival season a plentiful supply of masks, caps and grotesque suits is added to the stock. Men with mustaches laden with limes and laces or cooking utensils go about the streets of Havana, offering their goods to the women who cautiously peer out from behind barred windows. These carts have the appearance of a street organ and are pushed among the splendid smooth avenues of the city with ease. Often men will carry their stock, displaying it on a pole to which cross-wise sticks have been fastened, like the old fashioned clotheshorses. Toys also form a part of the stock of these human delivery wagons. - Leslie's Weekly.

SPEED IN BASEBALL.

What an Infield Double Play Means in Time and Action.

In an article on baseball in Everybody's Magazine the writer shows the wonderful speed that is used in making some of the plays. He says:

Making first base, though more dramatic to watch, is an uneventful expedition compared with the trip to second. It takes a fast man to negotiate the journey in 3.2-3.5 seconds. No thrown ball goes over 300 feet, and if a batted ball travels beyond the safe limits of a single throw it must be relayed by the fielders. While you are watching the outfielder scamper after the ball the relay line is being swiftly formed in the infield. There could be no such quick and accurate fielding of deep outfield hits if the outfielder taking the ball did not know that behind him was ranged his line of relays ready to take the ball the instant he could turn and throw it. The relay line in a professional team forms almost automatically.

To make a double play in the infield the shortstop, for example, must field a ball that has been batted about 135 feet. He passes the ball from ten to twenty-five feet to the second baseman, who must then throw it ninety feet to first. All this while the batter is running ninety feet, a trick that, as we have seen, it takes a snappy runner to turn in 3.5 seconds. It's a close call and a case of utilizing the fraction of a second, but with sharp fielding the margin is all on the side of the fielders. The double play is the menace ever threatening the runner on first.

Where the Fruit Grows.

A politician in San Francisco who has been in office and on the city payroll for many years was addressing a meeting of his fellow citizens. It was a labor meeting.

"You men must know," spouted the orator, "that you are the great body politic in this city. You are the roots and trunk of our great municipal tree, while we who represent you in office are merely branches on that magnificent tree."

"True for you," piped a man in the back of the hall. "But did ye ever notice all the fruit grows on the branches." - Saturday Evening Post.

As Far as He Got.

One day when William M. Evarts, secretary of state under President Hayes, was a college student he was called on to read Vergil in class.

He started out bravely: "Three times I strove to cast my arms around her neck, and end" - adding lamely - "that's as far as I got, professor."

"Well, Mr. Evarts," said the professor, "I think that was quite far enough."

Too Good to Lose.

"Will you be my wife?" asked the star boarder.

"Let me see," mused the landlady. "You've boarded with me four years. You have never grumbled at the food. You have always paid promptly. No; I can't accept you. You are too good a boarder to be put on the free list." - London Telegraph.

Depressing.

"Were there laughter and cheers during your speech?"

"Well," answered the youthful statesman, "there weren't many cheers, but now and then people in the audience looked at one another and laughed." - Washington Star.

Also Sharp.

"Miss Polly's father is a man who is blunt."

"Yes; he wanted to know the other night if I were coming to the point." - Baltimore American.

Hard to Answer.

Clinton-I suppose your little one ask you many embarrassing questions? Clubleigh-Yes; they are just like their mother. - Boston Transcript.

ICE REPORT.

BEAUTY WAS FATAL IN A BARBER SHOP.

"You're next! Now, don't shove and crowd there. We have plenty of soap and the razors are honed to a hair-raising finish."

This is the admonition given every hour or so to the customer of the new "lady barber shop," the first on the upper west side, which was opened yesterday near 101st street and Broadway, New York. There will be only two women barbers today. Yesterday there were three. There is a reason.

When the shop was opened a beautiful brunette, whose eyes snapped fire as she stropped her razor and whose face beamed forth a smile that lighted the entire place, caused a congestion of "nexts." Everybody waited for her. One of the idle woman barbers, who was interested in the enterprise to the extent of owning it, gave the comely girl her first day's pay and leading her to the door bid her goodbye and wished her luck.

To say that the woman's barber shop has created a furore among the tenants of the apartment houses in the vicinity is putting it mildly. Already the staid old shops of the neighborhood are putting signs in their windows which read:

"The female barber is more deadly than the male."

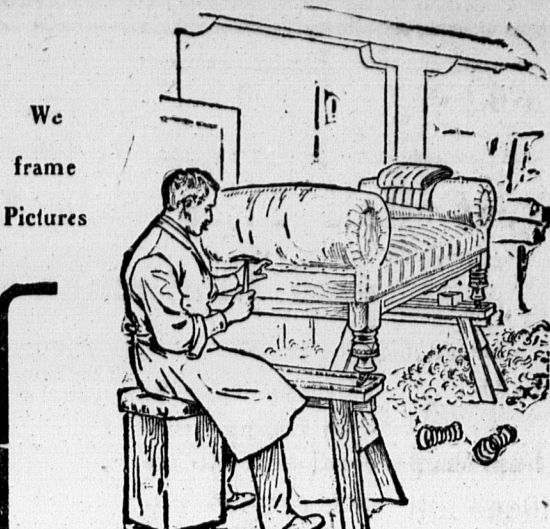

The woman barbers in the new shops are not conversationalists. They seldom speak unless spoken to. They say that while engaged in shaving, they must keep their minds on the work. It goes against the grain with them, they say, but they're out for trade and want to bive satisfaction.

They lost their first prospective customer, they said. A middle aged man came in and without looking around took off his coat. When he saw that women barbers were employed there he hurriedly left.

The shop is owned by Miss Dora Ulrich. She has been a barber nine years, she said learning the trade in Russia. The woman on the second chair is Miss Dora Morgonline, who has been fifteen years in the business and never cut an upper lip. They said yesterday they were looking for another girl, "even beauty," as business is very good.

"ETERNAL LIFE IS HERE," SAYS REV. M. J. MACLEOD

The following sermon is from the New York Herald and was preached by Rev. Mr. MacLeod, a brother of Mrs. (Dr.) H. D. Johnson, Charlottetown. Mr. MacLeod was invited to preach by Mrs. Russell Sage, whose name is familiar to Guardian readers. A photo of Mr. MacLeod accompanies the item.

One of the strongest of the four branches of the Collegiate Church of New York, the oldest church organization in Manhattan, is the Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas, at Fifty-eighth and Forty-Eighth Street. Within and without the edifice was pronounced one of the finest examples of Gothic architecture in this country by Dean Stanley on his visit to this city. In its belfry hangs the bell which was cast in 1728, in Amsterdam, for the St. Nicholas Church, vacant for almost two years. Then Mrs. Russell Sage, while travelling in California, met an eloquent young preacher, who was invited to supply the pulpit, and soon thereafter the Rev. Malcolm J. MacLeod was called to the pastorate. Born in Prince Edward Island, the Rev. Mr. MacLeod was graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary and later took post-graduate courses in Heidelberg, Germany, and McCormack Theological Seminary. His first charge was in Chester, Pa.; later he taught Greek in Lincoln University, and then for ten years he filled a pulpit in California, until he went to St. Nicholas Church almost two years ago.

Scholarly and with a brisk, forceful pulpit manner, the Rev. Mr. MacLeod has upheld the traditions of his eloquent predecessor and extended the influence of the church. Yesterday's sermon, doctrinal in character, he caused the communion service, illustrates Mr. MacLeod's pulpit style. His text was from Matthew, 25:46. "These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." He said in part: "What a pity the word 'eternal' should be used. Or shall I say, 'eternal' should be used? Remember it is the same word in both cases. Why then should it be translated everlasting in one part of the verse and eternal in the other? There is no reason. It is a poor translation. That is all. It ought to be rendered eternal in both cases."

"The Bible writers speak of the eternal hills, the eternal stars. They meant by that something whose end is not in sight. Any thing whose end was not in sight was to them eternal. And the point I am trying to sharpen is this. Nowhere in the scriptures are we told that eternal life is living a long time. It is the quality of our life that makes it eternal, not its quantity."

"Now that is a statement and statements are of no value unless we can prove them. So let us try to prove it. In John, 17:3 we read, 'This is eternal life that they might know Thee, the only true God and Jesus Christ whom Thou didst send.' Now it was Jesus who said that. 'Eternal life is not living a long time. Eternal life is knowing Jesus Christ. And knowing Jesus Christ is a condition of the soul. It is not something that begins at death or after death. It is something we have now. This 'is' eternal life. Of course eternal life may mean, and to some extent must mean continuance of being. But it is a life in Christ that is meant primarily. Unless something is worth having there can be no profit in having it for ever. Jesus did not say 'This is eternal life to live forever.' You remember what Paul says, 'I will hold on eternal life.' 'The Christian man is now a citizen of heaven. He has a vote already in that commonwealth. But someone says 'is not heaven far away?' The great things of the kingdom are everywhere. The sky comes clear down to the ground. We have heaven first in the heart and then in the sky. It begins when we let the King of the kingdom come in. A friend thought to comfort a blind man by saying, 'Well, John, you will soon be in heaven.' The blind man said 'I've been there for ten years.' What is there in heaven that you cannot have now. Is there peace there? It is here. Is there joy there? It is here. Is there love there? We have love here. Is the Master there? He is here, everywhere. Have eternal life, have it, have it now. 'Beloved let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter. Eternal life is a present possession. We are fashioning our future every day. We are making our own heaven or our own hell. It is love that judges and if we are banished from the face of the King it is because we are unlovely. Plato said of Socrates that when he was put in a prison the prison became a palace. The narrow cell expanded. Bunyon in Iron's jail had a heaven all about him. He was delectable mountains. A good man in hell - why he'd make a heaven out of the place. And a bad man in heaven - well the opposite holds. To live is to be in tune with God."

FRENCH VIEW OF BERNARD SHAW.

A lecture was delivered recently in London on "Bernard Shaw as Viewed in France" to the members of the Bedford Park Literary and Philosophical Society by Dr. L. N. Chase, of the University of Bordeaux. The lecturer said that although the name of Bernard Shaw was in a popular sense all but unknown in France, less known than it was in America, Austria or Russia, his works had been examined with great thoroughness. Last winter no fewer than four Shaw courses were given to university audiences, yet it was only six years since the first searching, article, thoughtful and moderate, on Shaw appeared in a French review.

The man who had written and spoken on Shaw was M. Hamel, also a socialist. As a philosopher Shaw had been compared to Darwin, Schopenhauer and Herbert Spencer, but the two names invariably brought forward with his in France were Ibsen and Nietzsche. One critic who compared Shaw with Nietzsche received this letter from Mrs. Shaw: Mr. Shaw thinks you overestimate his debt to Nietzsche, but adds that had Nietzsche been an Irishman living in London rather than a Pole living in Germany he would have been more Nietzschean than he was."

The French, the lecturer continued, were convinced that Shaw had an excellent subject in satirizing English life, and were quite sure that whatever in him was remarkable was French, and that they should recognize him as one of themselves. Another French critic had compared him to Voltaire and Anatole France, like them he indulged in irony, which was essentially French. To think of Shaw even tentatively as an English Anatole France had a certain attraction.
