RY. COMMISSION TO CONTINUE THE FREIGHT INCREASE

MONTREAL, Jan. 3.—An order has been issued by the Board of Railway Commissioners continuing the twenty-five per cent increase in freight rates on the railways indefinitely. The increase in freights was made by Order-in-Council on August 12, 1918, under the War Measure Act, and expired automatically December 31, 1919. It was stated today, that the advance in railway wages, caused by the application to Canada of the McAdoo award, had amounted to an increased expenditure by the Canadian railways of about $82,000,000 yearly. Advance in freight and passenger rates had increased by about forty millions. The problem of meeting this deficit will come before the Railway Board sooner or later it was stated, in a demand for further adjustment of rates to meet costs.

P. E. I. "CINDRELLA HEIRESS"—Last Sunday's Boston Post contains a double column portrait of Miss Agnes McNevin, the Bonshaw, P. E. I. girl who was recently bequeathed a fortune of $250,000. The Post says: The will of Mrs. Mary C. Knight, wealthy Roxbury woman, who died recently, leaving $250,000 to Miss Agnes McNevin, her companion and housekeeper for the last 25 years, was allowed by Judge Grant in Probate Court Friday. There was no contest. Miss McNevin retired one night recently a woman of meagre means awaking an heiress with hundreds of thousands at her command. Roxbury's "Cinderella," as she has been called, is a quiet, sensible woman with no new tangled ideas, and her friends say she'll do much good with her money. Miss McNevin refuses to talk at all about the matter, except to say that this was the happiest Christmas she has ever seen. The Knight residence at 46 Perrin Street, Roxbury, was left to Miss McNevin in the will. Others in the service of Mrs. Knight were handsomely remembered.

The Irish Problem

Sir:—Your recent brief editorial reference to the Irish Question in which you remark that "Sir Horace Plunkett said the other day that no plan of government for Ireland evolved by Englishmen would ever be effective" and in which further on your either jokingly or scoffingly observe that "even the plan proposed by the great Welshman is not acceptable and Sir Horace himself was chairman of the convention of Irishmen that tried to find a settlement and failed," and that "DeValera appears to think he will be able to find a solution in the United States" prompts one to ask you a question or two.

Why did the convention over which Sir Horace presided, fail to find a settlement? and where did you yourself sir, think DeValera or any other lawfully elected Irish leader will find a solution? Will it be in England or in the United States as you say?

While awaiting your answers to these questions it might be apposite to quote what the great Lord Northcliffe has written in the London Times. His opinion of how Englishmen are dealing with Irish affairs may serve to throw some light on these questions. Northcliffe says: "There is strong prima facie evidence of the existence of a powerful conspiracy to frustrate the prospect of an Irish peace" And he goes on to say that Lord French and the rest of the executive which has to deal with Irish affairs are being used," whether with the connivance of members of the cabinet or not, to arouse in Ireland a state of feeling if not a state of rebellion, in which settlement may become impossible." And we were informed by no less an authority than the great scholar statesman and patriot Gladstone, that this "powerful conspiracy" was much in evidence away back in 1800 when the extinction of the Irish Parliament was accomplished, for in a speech at Plymouth in 1884 he described the Union by virtue of which Ireland is up to this day deprived of her self-government as "a pact effected by the most shameful bribery, fraud, corruption and dishonor." Professor Lecky of Trinity College, Dublin al so characterized that Union deal as "a pact of the most shameful turpitude in history," and was there not evidence of this "powerful conspiracy" a few years ago when the Asquith Home Rule Bill which was acceptable to the then Irish leader, John Redmond, was passed in the British House of Commons and no sooner was it passed than it received its quietus, so shamefully, so farcically, yet so effectually that it would no doubt not only have aroused Ireland, but the whole world as well were it not for the fact that the winning of the great war for the time over-shadowed all other matters?. And does it not yet look as if this "powerful conspiracy" of which Lord Northcliffe speaks were not busily at work, even today and after a very active career extending over 120 years when we find the Daily Herald of London commenting on the present condition of Ireland as follows:—

"Were it not that the people of this island talk English it would be easy to imagine that one had strayed into some conquered region of enemy Europe. Ireland is under military occupation. Our rule has all the familiar features of a conquest. Foreign troops in khaki dominate Dublin much as they dominate Cologne, and the outward order rests on the fact that the tanks and the machine guns are always ready. The repression is formidable and well organized. The rights of meeting, of printing, have ceased for the great mass of the population. Their organizations are illegal and are driven under ground The prisons are filled as in the days of the Land League."

It is stated that 63 of Ireland's lawfully elected members of Parliament have been imprisoned for a period of from three to eighteen months most of them without any trial, and Count Plunkett among the rest! But back to our question. Can you tell me why Sir Horace and the Irish Convention failed to find a settlement? "And DeValera appears to think that he will find a solution in the United States." Well, at all events it looks as if he will at least find generous help there. For did not the Senate of that great country lately pass a resolution in favor of Irish Home Rule? And did not the Australian Parliament pass a similar resolution and also the Canadian Parliament a few years ago? And it seems that the European Press is urging the granting of the same. The press of France and Italy and of Holland and that able and patriotic soldier, General Smutts, who is now Premier of South Africa in his final message to England declared that "the British Empire will cease to exist if the Irish claim is not settled on the principles of freedom, and justice and that too in point of self-preservation as well as self-determination."

So it looks, sir, as if DeValera will find at least generous support in the solution of his difficult problem in other parts of the world besides the United States.

I am, sir, etc.,
D. J. MULLIN.

St. Peters, P. E. I.,
January 1, 1920.

(The reference was intended neither "jokingly" nor "scoffingly" but merely as written. The Irish problem has so far defied the solution of the best minds in Great Britain and of an all-Ireland convention. Probably a convention of representative Irishmen from all over the Empire and the United States would prove more successful, and at any rate is worth consideration and trial. It is perfectly true, as our correspondent shows, that the London Times denounces the present method of misgoverning Ireland, and most other leading papers agree with it. But adverse criticisms of existing conditions do not constitute a solution. While Lord Northcliffe, the proprietor and director of The Times, himself a distinguished Irishman, condemns the bureaucratic, visionless repression of Irish sentiment and aspirations, he admits that the British Government's latest Home Rule Bill provides the beginning of a satisfactory way out of Ireland's troubles. On the other hand the leading nationalists do not approve the measure and consider it far less satisfactory than the act which was passed on the eve of the war and subsequently shelved. Lord Northcliffe's pronouncement follows:—

"I believe the scheme of Irish Government which the Prime Minister has outlined is based on sound principles," says Lord Northcliffe. "A temporary division of Ireland, much as I dislike the idea, is probably the shortest path to eventual union. The Commonwealth of Australia grew from separate colonies So did the Dominion of Canada, and the Union of South Africa. But the government scheme is far from perfect. If Ireland is to be divided the historic Province of Ulster should be a unit. The link of the proposed Irish council might with advantage be made stronger. Why should it not be an Irish Congress or House of Representatives?

"The right of the Irish people to full fiscal automony should be definitely recognized. The scheme is, however, a beginning and I hope the government will have courage to go on."—Ed. G.
