A Morning Smile

THAT KINDLY WORD

General Higgins of the Salvation Army told the following story in his lecture:

In a Chicago restaurant a customer asked for a piece of toast, an egg, a cup of coffee, and a kind word. The order was duly executed, except the last item. As the waiter was about to leave the customer said: "What about the kind word?" The waiter paused for a moment, and replied: "Don't eat that egg."

JUDGE IS PLAYED BY PICCOLO PETE

KEY WEST, Fla., Jan. 20.—Judge Vining Harris wasn't altogether satisfied that the prisoner before the bar, a negro who called himself "Piccolo Pete," was telling the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

"No, suh, judge, the banjo," replied Pete. "Well, let's hear you play 'Home, Sweet Home'."

Producing the banjo, Pete strummed upon it so sweetly that the judge, deeply moved, declared: "I was going to give you 60 days, but I'll just make it 30. Now give me an encore."

Old Fashioned vs. Modern Wife Dorothy Dix Upholds Modern Wife for Modern Man

Every Man Thinks That the Old-Fashioned Wife Was Perfect, But the Modern Man Demands More of His Wife Than the Old-Fashioned Man did of His, and if He Could Have a Wife Like Grandma Today He Would Have None of Her

Somebody is always asking which made the better wife, the woman of the past or the woman of the present. As the cynical Goldberg says, "they all look good far away."

"And now, lookit the washout the modern wife is! Always wanting to step out of an evening. Always running up bills for imported finery. Feeding her husband out of paper bags. Selfish. Lazy. Naggers. Gimme sisters, every one of them."

All of which possibly grandpa said in his heart about grandma, for the wife supply is just the same now as it has been ever since Adam got his. There have always been good women and bad women. Wives who were jewels and wives whose gold plating wore off as soon as they caught a husband.

If you could go back to our remotest ancestors in the cave days, you would find that there was some sleek female who always loafed on the job and managed to get out of doing her share of labor, and who made some big hairy giant of a husband jump when she spoke to him.

No, the parasitic wife isn't a modern invention. Tempers aren't a new form of discord as jazz is. Nor is nagging a new way that women have devised of expressing their opinions of their husbands, as broadcasting is.

The drone wife and the vixen wife have always been with us, and probably always will be with us, but I think that we can say in all fairness that her tribe has not increased, and that she is no commoner a figure now than she was in the past.

Indeed, on the contrary, the greatest modern improvement is the improvement in women. They have learned efficiency and acquired habits of industry through being in business. They have learned how to handle money thriftyly by earning it. Education has broadened their outlook, and given them a truer sense of values, and so, taking them by and large, the present generation of wives are the best helpmates men ever had.

Of course, it is natural for us to idealize and glorify the good old times. Men are especially prone to do this, and to let their imaginations run riot when they picture the woman of the past. They figure her as a composite of Patient Griselda and a French chef and a cash register, and think how lucky grandfather was to have had a wife who was content to stay put in her kitchen and concoct dainty dishes for him to eat; who never talked back, no matter how she was treated, and who was a miracle worker who could run a house and put up a good appearance without also running up bills.

Of course, no such creature ever existed as this mythical perfect wife of the past, but if it were possible to summon grandmother from the shades, grandson would have none of her. For the modern man demands far more of his wife than the old-fashioned man did of his.

In grandfather's time, for instance, all that a man expected of his wife was for her to be a good housekeeper and a good wife and mother. That was all, and when she performed her duties in those respects she could knock off and call it a day.

He didn't expect her to remain perpetually young and beautiful and keep a boyish figure. He didn't expect her to be a vamp and a fascinator; to have always read the latest book and to be ready to grab her hat and run with him whenever he felt like stepping out.

But the modern man wants his wife to do all of that, and then some. She must be a blue ribbon cook, who can make old sheep taste like spring lamb. She must be a fancier, who can make 105 cents out of every dollar. She must be able to be up all night with a sick baby and appear serene and smiling in a pink frock at breakfast. She must be able to keep him from looking slantwise at the flappers. She must be queen of the jolliers, a working partner, a playmate, a siren and a wife all rolled into one.

Furthermore, the woman of today has to wrestle with a demon that the woman of the past never knew—the high cost of living, and the miracle of financing that the average wife does with her housekeeping allowance would entitle her to be Secretary of the Treasury if she got her just deserts.

Of course, the modern wife is far from perfect. Heaven knows she would be no fit mate for the modern man if she were! But taking her all in all, she puts out a pretty good job in her line. And every day, in every way, she is growing better and better.

Pain Over Kidneys Was Soothed Away

A splendid recovery was made by Mr. A. S. Gray of Elberts, Sask. He heard of a good kidney medicine and used it. "I started using Dr. Hamilton's Pills a few months ago and find them a great medicine for Stomach, Liver and Kidney troubles. ENORMOUS PALACE FOR LONDON MASONS

GLASGOW, Jan. 20.—Excellent progress is being made with the enormous building which it is destined to house the administrative headquarters of British Free-masonry. Dedicated as a Masonic peace memorial, the palace—for its dimensions warrant the designation—will, when completed cover an area of no less than three and a half acres, and will give to the region of Kingsway a tower which will actually overtop Nelson's Column, says the Glasgow Herald.

Work has been proceeding now for a year or two, but I was told to-day that another 18 months must elapse before the building is ready for occupation, while further efforts are to be made to complete the fund of £1,000,000, which was inaugurated for the purpose in 1926. The memorial will contain an impressive temple, a library, a museum, and suites of offices, and will be the largest and most up-to-date centre of its kind in the world. America, it is true, boasts Masonic buildings of slightly greater girth, but they are invariably split up, not only into Masonic chambers, but into ordinary residential flats as well.

CANADA'S SEED SUPPLY

One of the most important factors in successful farming is a convenient and assured supply of seed of known quality. Canada is fortunate in this respect in that the policy of the Seed Branch of the Federal Department of Agriculture has built up supplies of high quality commercial and registered seed at convenient points throughout Canada.

Every Province in the Dominion is now producing high grade seed in commercial quantities and of the kinds suited to the seed production possibilities of the various provinces.

Some idea of the value of the seed production is available from the state ment issued by the Branch that, in the Maritime Provinces returns for 1930 show seed supplies as follows: Prince Edward Island has handled 40,000 pounds of Bent Grass Seed; the Memramcook and Sackville district of New Brunswick have some 140,000 pounds of Bent Grass seed; in Nova Scotia in Digby and Yarmouth counties some 1,700 pounds of registered and 2,500 pounds of commercial turnip seed is available, while the production of registered seed oats in each of the Maritime Provinces amounted to many thousands of bush els.

The Bent Grass and turnip seed production of the Maritime Provinces is of a recognized superior quality and should be welcomed by seed buyers in the other provinces.

How To Make Doughnuts

In making doughnuts our aim has been to obtain a good-tasting doughnut that is tender and free from cracks. The cracking of the doughnut on the surface and the consequent soaking of fat is one of the chief causes of indigestibility. There are two reasons why doughnuts crack. One may be the result of too rich a mixture. It is therefore, important to have a right proportion of ingredients and to take utmost care in measuring as well as the mixing.

The dough should be as soft as possible, and it should be handled as little as possible. We find that dough too soft to handle may be put into the refrigerator. In an hour it stiffens considerably and is much more easily handled than a dough at room temperature. A generous quantity of flour may be used on the board to prevent sticking, as the flour which clings to the doughnuts browns on them when put in the deep fat. Do not mix any of this extra flour into the dough when taking up the pieces for the second patting out.

Cracking of the doughnut may also be caused by too low a temperature of the fat used for frying. The temperature must be just right and kept that way, otherwise the doughnut will be fat soaked. We find that a temperature of 375 degrees Fahrenheit is about right when lard is used, and 385 degrees Fahrenheit when a vegetable oil or hydrogenated fat is employed. It is an interesting fact that lard produces a lighter colored brown than other oils and a dough fried in lard seems sweeter than when fried in other fats. Whatever fat is used, the important thing is to heat it to the right temperature. A deep fat frying thermometer is invaluable in frying doughnuts, and with a thermometer there is much less risk of grease soaking into the dough. The fat should be heated slowly and the thermometer should be put into the kettle.

Be careful not to heat the fat beyond the desired temperature. Fat that is heated too high breaks down into a sharp, disagreeable smelling substance called acrolein. And this substance is also indigestible. If care is used in heating the fat it may be used many times. Searing the outside of the doughnut by several turnings when it is first put into the fat is another precaution against cracking.

Immediately after taking the doughnuts from the fat, place on absorbent (unglazed) paper napkins are excellent for this purpose.
