Married Quarters

BY DAVID STALL.

Continued

Naomi thought it would be difficult to write, but she simply told Mary a part of the truth, and begged her to keep her own counsel and to Poppy if she happened to see either of them by chance at her father's house at Sunday dinner. A few minutes before dinner was served she made her way downstairs, and was directed to the library by the butler. The Rector was there alone, and when he saw the slight figure in grey coming gliding into the room, he came forward with a very rapid step, took both her hands, and unfolded them close.

"Dear Miss Bradford, it is impossible for me to thank you; I haven't any words for the purpose God undoubtedly put it into your heart to come here to-night. You are His messenger, and you are more welcome and more needed than you know in this house."

"Oh, Mr. Pomeroy, I am so glad you and Lady Augusta have taken it like this. It was rather a bad, drastic step to take, but somehow I just knew I had to do it, and now, please God, Poppy will be quite all right. She is very homesick, poor child!"

"But not absolutely regretting her marriage, I hope?" said the Rector anxiously. "That is the final catastrophe, and I fear it is happening in a good many quarters just now."

"Not exactly regretting it, but the conditions are trying. They are war-conditions, and they should have been made a little easier for her. I am sure that later on she will settle down all right, but just now it is all so strange and difficult for her. I am sure when she has seen you and her mother she will be a different creature."

"Tell me when you saw her last," he asked, and there was the keenest fatherly anxiety in his voice. It was wonderful that it had not urged him to take some steps on his own account before now. Naomi marvelled over it as she explained that she had seen Poppy at Archer's Farm only the previous afternoon. She was describing how she looked, and partially how she lived, when Lady Augusta entered, followed by Simms to announce that dinner was served.

It was all a great adventure to Naomi, and now that the critical ordeal was so happily over she enjoyed every moment of it. The ordered dignity, beauty and grace of life pleased her senses, and yet awakened in her soul a faint revolt. Some had too much, and many, many had too little! From Slattery's Ann downwards, thousands had been cheated of such beauty and dignity, had never known it, would perhaps never know it. But out of the surge and welter of war must arise a new world of reconstruction, built on fairer, more generous lines, with more equal rights for all. Asked why she was so quiet a little later in the library, where they sat invariably after dinner, Naomi was moved to some expression of what was in her mind.

"I can't help thinking, Lady Augusta, that there are things which must be altered after this war."

"What kind of things?" asked Lady Augusta anxiously, looking up from the khaki scarf she industriously knitted every evening after dinner, having just started her fifty-sixth.

"It is all so beautiful here, and so many have never seen beauty nor known it. They must be taught to care about it, and be given the chance to share it."

The Rector looked up from his study of the Evening Standard, and Naomi was struck by the expression on his face.

"I have been thinking lately that perhaps that is one of the reasons this gigantic conflict has been permitted to right the wrong and even some of the injustices of life."

"EASTMAN" BOX CAMERA FOR MONCTON MAN

Free premium for poker hands with Rosebud smoking tobacco.

As this business man of Moncton expresses it, "Rosebud" is a valuable and desirable present as an Eastman box camera absolutely free for four complete sets of poker hands, I consider Rosebud is far and away the biggest value in good smoking tobacco on the market. There are articles for personal wear for the ladies and for the men as well as electrical appliances and home utensils. It is very easy to obtain these premiums as one poker hand is in the large ten cent package and two poker hands in the larger fifteen cent package.

had showed Jim Bradford to the door, with cutting sarcasm and righteous indignation, because his class was threatened! How had it come about?

More amazing still, his statement was not confronted by Lady Augusta; nay, she even nodded in assent, as she counted her stitches to find what had become of a missing one.
But the most human bit of that amazing day was when Calway came hovering about the mulberry room that night on the pretext of doing something to help the guest.

"Please, Miss Bradford, excuse me, but we are all so anxious about Miss Poppy downstairs. We hope you've come from her, and that she is quite well."

"My dear, she is quite well, and as you've been so awfully kind to me I'll tell you something you will like to hear. I am sure it is going to be all right quite soon, and that your dear Miss Poppy will be coming back on a visit soon."

"And her husband, Miss?" asked Calway anxiously.

And Naomi answered boldly and innocently:

"Why, yes, of course, her husband too!"

CHAPTER XXII

Jim Bradford, unexpectedly freed from duty for the afternoon, borrowed Philbach's motor bicycle and rode down to Archer's immediately after lunch to take Poppy for a spin. If he found her in a good mood he would take her to his mother's for tea. His conscience regarding the house above the shop was a little uneasy. It was a Monday afternoon, and the reason for slacking on such an unusual day was that an inspection by the War Office, including a distinguished artillery officer from the Italian front, had fallen through and been postponed. If he should find Poppy in a good mood!

Married quarters had resolved themselves into dependence on the moods and caprices of Jim's wife. He loved her as dearly as ever, perhaps more dearly, because he realized now, when too late, the tremendous responsibility he had incurred, both for himself and her, when he took charge of her young life. These unavailing regrets were not for himself, for he was a brave man who could stand up to the greatest odds with the coolest courage, but for her.

He had not known enough about life, nor yet realized how strong are the bonds of tradition and of race. Only the very few could break away successfully, and Poppy was not one of them. Rather inclined to morbid though he now doubted very much whether she cared for him at all. Certainly her gleams of tenderness grew rarer and rarer. He was jealous of Reggie Vandaleur, though he could not help liking him. It was a queer, impersonal kind of jealousy. He even felt in strange exalted moments that he ought to apologise for coming between them, and the greatest service he could render them would be to go back to the front and get himself effaced.

DODGE DEPENDABILITY TRUE ECONOMY is more than price deep

Owners of the Dodge Six and Eight are gratified that the features which contribute most notably to the pleasure of owning these cars are also responsible for their economy, dependability and long life.
The carefully-perfected balance of the engines means less vibration. The floating comfort on the road means that the engine and chassis, as well as the passengers, are virtually free from shock and strain.
The strength and permanentsilence of the Mono-Piece Steel Bodies reflect freedom from upkeep expense as well as greater safety. The internal weatherproof hydraulic brakes, which give such reassuringly positive stops, are self-equalizing—require no costly adjusting—reduce wear on tires.
Now more than ever before, Dodge cars combine all of the factors you want most in a motor car.
