

KEPT AWAKE BY BACKACHE

She Was Always Tired

TRIED KRUSCHEN—NOW FULL OF LIFE

Only those who have experienced backache can understand how painful it can be. Only they can understand the disappointment of this woman as she tried one remedy after another—only to find that they failed. And they will appreciate her delight at now being able to write the following letter:

"I was always feeling tired, never had any energy, and could get no sleep at night, for the pain in my back. So after trying several different so-called remedies (which did me no good at all), I decided to try Kruschen Salts. I am delighted to be able to say that I am now a different woman, full of life and energy, and free from the pain in the back."—(Mrs.) M. A.

Kruschen will coax your kidneys back to healthy, normal action so that they will rid your blood-stream of every particle of poisonous waste matter. As an immediate result you will experience joyous relief from those old, dragging pains. And as you persevere with the "Little Daily Dose" of Kruschen, the twinges will become less and less frequent until finally your backache will be no more than the memory of a bad dream.

The Million Dollar Doll

By C. N. & A. M. Williamson

"Am I too early?" he asked, as he accepted Mrs. Sheridan's invitation to sit down.
"No," she assured him pleasantly, though with a wandering mind. "I ordered tea—but you shall have some fresh. What have you found out about my husband—and the girl?"
"They've gone to Bousada," the Shoe King answered. "It's a motor trip of seven hours at least. They won't have arrived there yet. The chauffeur and car were engaged to be absent from three to four days. I found out at the garage where the auto was hired."
"Good!" said Betty. "I'm much obliged to you for taking all this trouble."
"It was not trouble," the Greek protested. You seem to have changed, Mrs. Sheridan. You're not interested!

"Oh, yes I am, awfully interested," she insisted.
"Surely you've not altered your mind—in regard to your husband?" There was anxiety in Nazlo's tone, and Betty faintly smiled. She knew that what he had done wasn't for love of her blue eyes. He had some design which concerned the girl. Either he wanted revenge, or wanted the girl herself. That was the reason why he wished to prevent Miles from being divorced, and free.

"I haven't changed in any way," she said. "I'm quite a little drama here playing in Mr. Nazlo's mind. There seem to be so many funny complications! I suppose the next one will be Miles turning up on the yacht—with his pretty lady—and finding me in possession."
"That may happen tomorrow," Nazlo agreed. And as Betty kept her opinion of his motives to herself, so he kept to himself his next intentions. He had thought of telling her that he meant to start early in the morning by train for Bousada, yet something in her manner caused him to decide otherwise.
He could not define that "something," but he connected it with Prince Paul di Salvano. The young woman had the air of being up to some implied trick. She might even hope to persuade Salvano to throw over the Callahan girl, and run away with her instead. It would be just as well to let her believe that she had plenty of rope to play with, by hurrying Sheridan back from Bousada to Algiers.

Nazlo was still sitting with Betty on the terrace of the St. George, when Paul di Salvano, the young Miles Sheridan's car drove up before the little hotel whose white facade was painted rose-by-the-sunset.

PAUL'S TREACHERY

Salvano had lied to Betty. He and Rose Callahan were married. But even if Mrs. Sheridan had not come to Algiers with her letters and her threats, his position would still have been insecure.
Callahan, delighted at first with his title, had taken the precaution of making enquiries before allowing things to go too far. He had expected debts, but not disgraceful debts, and the affair with Mrs. Sheridan was not the only one that had started scandal.

The old man would have liked to secure the right kind of a prince for a son-in-law, but it looked as if Salvano weren't the right kind. Not only that, but there were plenty of better princes where Salvano came from, and in various other countries. Callahan resolved to take Rose when these princes were, and where Prince Paul di Salvano was not. But he made one error of judgment. He let Rose and Salvano see too clearly, and too soon what was in his mind.

Rose knew her father well. She had been in love before—though not like this—and Pop hadn't "got down" to the men. He had been right in those cases, because they weren't good enough for her, but this one was. She adored Paolo, and meant to have him. It was she, therefore, who warned Salvano of danger, and suggested a secret marriage, because "Pop would have to come round in the end."

The Prince, being Italian, would not have dared propose it, for the simple reason that such a marriage would not in fact be legal, and he might be accused of deceiving the girl. He explained in a half-hearted way, that there were difficulties. Without the prince's consent a marriage would not hold in his own country; and there were besides all sorts of formalities which must be observed. Still, they could be married according to American law, if his sweet Rose trusted him enough for a secret wedding. Then, if her father consented later, the whole thing could be gone over again in the proper way before outsiders knew the story.

Rose was sure her father would consent. Why, he'd have to! So a license was bought by the girl herself, and the two were married one afternoon at Jamaica, Long Island. Rose wrote to one or two friends, cautioning them not to tell. But she was in a mood not to care, really, whether they told or not. This mood changed somewhat, however, when the confession to Pop had been made, (by her, not Paolo) and she had seen how he took it.

"Surely you've not altered your mind—in regard to your husband?" There was anxiety in Nazlo's tone, and Betty faintly smiled. She knew that what he had done wasn't for love of her blue eyes. He had some design which concerned the girl. Either he wanted revenge, or wanted the girl herself. That was the reason why he wished to prevent Miles from being divorced, and free.

With this concession Salvano had to be content, on the principal of half a loaf being better than no bread, and on the understanding that—for the honour of the family—the most pressing debts should be paid immediately. Also, Callahan was willing to advance money for Salvano's travelling and other expenses.

The arrangement was humiliating, but Callahan was a millionaire several times over. If Pop could "keep on Pop's good side," as Rose pointed out, all disagreements would soon be forgotten. Pop was like that! He couldn't bear malice. Consequently Salvano was at present extremely busy in keeping on the good side of the old man, and he was succeeding, though Callahan remained gloomy and morose, suspicious every time that his son-in-law looked at any woman except Rose, or accepted an invitation to play bridge.

Betty Sheridan's letter had been almost a death sentence. Salvano had glanced it through, crumpled it and the envelope into his pocket, and thinking quickly, had walked in the wake of the Callahans, on the Terrace. He shuffled his thoughts like a pack of cards, and as a result allowed Rose to sit facing Mrs. Sheridan whom he saw as he passed through the doorway.

Presently, he knew, to try and prevent the girl or her father from seeing the newcomer. Such an attempt would fail, and excite the suspicions of both, though Salvano had long ago "had it out" with Rose about Betty. He'd explain that the affair had been the merest flirtation, that Mrs. Sheridan hadn't been precisely backward; and that their position in society had led to exaggeration. Rose had believed him; but he mustn't let her suppose for an instant that Betty's appearance in Algiers was in any way connected with him.

"There's that stuck-up cat of a Sheridan creature," was Rose's comment as her eyes singled out the bright hair glittered like gold in the afternoon sun.
"Really!" Salvano exclaimed. "You mean Mrs. Miles Sheridan? What a small world, isn't it? I mustn't talk about her, but I will in a minute—as if by accident. I suppose she has come to take care of her husband. Apparently he needs it—if what I hear is true."

Presently he did look, bowing to Betty and half rising from his chair. "How she has gone off!" he murmured to Rose. "Out of doors in the sunlight, which makes you so lovely, she's quite haggard. Trying to keep down in flesh works—best of all by themselves—under some pine tree commanding, perhaps, the most glorious view in the world as they greet the rising sun."

Says Modern Man Is Ugliest Ever

CAPE TOWN, South Africa, Sept. 26.—A visiting educationist, M. Rousseau, at a conference here declared men of today are about the ugliest he has ever seen. He wanted the learned men before him to give 10 or 15 minutes of their day to physical exercises—best of all by themselves—under some pine tree commanding, perhaps, the most glorious view in the world as they greet the rising sun.

CORNER CLEARED OF POOR ACTORS

(Canadian Press)
LONDON, Sept. 26.—Daily gathering of out-of-works of the more humble section of the theatrical world at "Poverty Corner" in Charing Cross Road, bordering on the theatre district, became so formidable the police felt compelled to take action in the interests of regular users of the sidewalks.
Instead, however, of instituting a ruthless and sudden "moving on" of the motley crowd of the workless the police sought the assistance of the Variety Artists' Federation, this body issued a polite worded notice, indicating how the assembly in Charing Cross Road inconvenienced the general public. The effect was immediate, for the next day Charing Cross Road was practically cleared of loafers.
The out-of-works tragedian and the downhearted jester dispersed. Most probably they now exchange their dreary confidences in the innumerable small cafes of the neighborhood.

Pile Sufferers

Can You Answer These Questions?
Do you know why external remedies as applied to sore and painful Piles are only local in effect and do not reach to true circulatory cause?
Why Piles may "come back" even after a first removal by cutting?
Do you know the cause of Piles is internal?
That there is congestion of blood in the lower bowel—the veins flabby, the arteries stiff?
Do you know that there is a harmless internal remedy for itching, bleeding or protruding piles discovered by Dr. Leonard, known as HEM-ROID and sold with your money back if not joyfully satisfied with the help one bottle gives?
HEM-ROID banishes piles by relieving congested circulation and helps to heal and restore the sore surfaces.
