Fishermen Reach Digby After Battle With Seas

DIGBY, Dec. 14—Three Maine fishermen swapped yarns with Sinnoes today as repairs were being made on the battered little vessel that carried them into the jaws of death and out again. Their motorship Lucille, tossed by angry seas for five and one half days, was picked up at the entrance of Digby Basin yesterday by the Bayview lifeboat and towed to Digby. Captain G. Holmes and his men were hungry and almost exhausted after their battle with the Bay of Fundy. Captain Holmes, who hails from Eastport, Maine, had with him Don Brown and Clement Perry. They left Eastport on Wednesday, December 7, bound for Bangor for lobster bait. Rough weather was encountered a few hours out of Eastport. The vessel soon was in difficulty. One of the engines went out of commission and the other followed a few minutes later. All Wednesday night the three men battled against the storm. A drag anchor was thrown out to assist in holding the vessel's head into the gale. Flares were sent up at regular intervals and four gallons of kerosene were used in burning torches.

There was no reply to their signals as they were swept further and further off the United States Coast. They were lost on the surging Bay of Fundy. Four days later the hardy fishermen were given fresh hope as Cape St. Mary's loomed up in the distance. An hour before daylight yesterday morning the lookout saw Point Prim light at the entrance of Digby harbor. A small sail, saved for the emergency, was rigged and the crippled vessel was near port when taken in tow by the lifeboat. Today the fishermen were "right as rain" after their first sleep in nearly a week. They were eager to get home. A little known race called the Rock People, whose ancestors fought the Romans 2000 years ago, and were driven into the mountains will be studied by a British expedition which has left Cairo to explore some of the more inaccessible parts of the Libyan Desert, vast areas of which remain entirely unknown. The expedition is led by Major R. A. Bagnold, Royal Corps of Signals, who led two previous expeditions in the Libyan Desert in 1929 and 1930.

RESUMING WORK ON GIANT LINER

GLASGOW, Scotland, Dec. 14—Following a conference with directors of the Cunard Steamship Company, officials of the John Brown shipbuilding firm here announced today they expected work on the new giant Cunarder would be resumed soon. Work on this ship, not yet named, which was to have been the largest vessel afloat, was suspended last Spring when the Cunard Company found itself unable to continue financing construction. The John Brown firm said today it expected negotiations between itself and the Cunard Company and financial interests would result in a resumption of construction.

NEW NEBULAE DISCOVERED BILLIONS OF MILES AWAY

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14—Discovery of 6,000 new nebulae or "island universes" countless billions of miles away from the earth and each probably containing billions of stars was announced today in the annual report of the Carnegie Institution. They were found in previously unexplored regions of the sky during the past year with the aid of the 100-inch telescope, largest in the world, at the Carnegie Institution's Mount Wilson Observatory in California. There are believed to be millions of these nebulae out in space.

Christmas Spirit Rules Again Across Land

Rich And Poor, Old And Young, Are Possessed Of Yuletide Feeling Of Peace And Good Will

TORONTO, Dec. 14 (C.P.)—Santa Claus, a composite figure of lean and fat, short and long, but always rose-cheeked and chuckling is abroad again on the land. In dozens of Canadian cities and towns, this scene is repeated: Excited children push and pull at restrained parents. Father wears Bond Street clothes, an imported Ulster, or he wears grimy jeans and a self-effacing sheepish grin. Mother wears a fur coat, or shivers in someone's discarded finery not intended for either season or the wearer.

A band swings down the street, martial music fills the air, the Drum Major's shako sweeps the sky above the throng. It's been a hard, troublous year for rich and poor and father is determined not to be too much impressed. A ripple runs through the crowd. The King approaches—in red and white whisks. "Ha, ha, ha, ha, ha, ha!" he booms without restraint. His red velvet all but sparkles in the early winter sunshine. His cheeks are rosy from the cool air. "Well, well and well, hullo there, Sonny," he shouts with an encompassing wave of a short fat arm.

A startled, wondrous smile grows into being. Santa has spoken—to Son. Father looks at Son's face. The banal notes and heavy d'seconds of want and riches are alike forgotten. Father is all smiles, good cheer, full of Peace-on-earth—and suddenly formed Christmas resolutions. Santa, the modern incarnation of the Mediaeval Christmas Masse, commemorating the Birth of Christ continues on his way. But the look on Son's face remains imprinted on the thoughts and actions of others.

And the Christmas spirit, as typified by the composite figures of 100 Santas on 100 street corners, in the aisles of Mercantile establishments in the North, South, East and West, marches on toward December 25.

From Halifax to Vancouver, professional and amateur charmers of youth are beginning a reign that shall be almost unchallenged. Organized relief agencies and religious bodies are adding their contribution toward a nation-wide stage setting of Holly and Mistletoe for the good Saint Nicholas.

Upwards of 1,000 Salvation Army Kettles will stand on as many street corners throughout the Dominion during the next three weeks, some of them attended by Santa Claus himself in one of his numberless manifestations. The Salvation Army goes yearly into the seeking coins tossed by city folk, aglow with the spirit generated by Sonny's smile. Most of the money of this and similar agencies is used to take Christmas joy to those who otherwise would be neglected.

Some of the other red-garbed Santas are volunteers, but the majority are professionals, working for pay and proud of their calling. Salaries vary from a few dollars a week in small towns to larger sums paid the skilled performer in large department stores.

Historic Erin To Be Studied

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Dec. 14—(Canadian Press)—Professor E. A. Hooton, of the department of Anthropology of Harvard University has announced a survey of the complete racial history of Ireland will be undertaken. The survey will cover prehistoric times and extend to present-day Irish Free State social, economic and racial characteristics. Considered a pioneer anthropological survey of modern times, the project has the approval of President Eamon De Valera of the Irish Free State. In a preliminary survey during the past summer, new evidences of early Irish life were unearthed in excavations, bringing to light valuable information on prehistoric and early Christian periods. Spurred on by these excavations, Dr. Hooton plans a five-year study from archaeological, sociological and physical anthropological angles.

At Ballinderry, in County Westmeath, was discovered last summer a "cranog" or lake dwelling of the 10th century, A. D. Surrounded by high stakes, it was a huge wooden building, built on a raft-like platform of logs in the centre of the lake. Remains of dug-out canoes were close by. It is believed this building was inhabited for nearly 1,000 years by the ancient Irish, with probably 40 persons at a time. Another discovery was a huge cairn or stone grave mound dating back to the prehistoric bronze age. It is situated on the 600-foot hill of Knockast, traditionally known as the hill of victory.
