BARBARA ANN GETS U. S. VISA

A heart-free Barbara Ann Scott visited H. Earle Russell, U. S. consul-general with whom she is pictured above, and secured her U. S. visa for use "early in the fall," according to the pretty skater. Accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Clyde Scott, Barbara Ann arrived in Toronto for a flying visit and returned to her summer cabin at Brockville, Ont., after the necessary official proceedings to enable her to travel to Hollywood and New York in the near future, seeking fame in the movie world. "The ring which I accepted as a friendship gift from George Fulford, Jr., I returned to him," said Barbara Ann. "It was a beautiful diamond ring which belonged to his grandmother and he wanted me to have it. I guess it was silly of me to wear it, but I did, and then everybody thought I was engaged. I'm not."

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE—Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X R
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this example A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

(By Thornton W. Burgess)

REDDY FOX FEELS FOOLISH

The witty, clever and the wise
Are sometimes taken by surprise.
—Reddy Fox.

Blacky the Crow chuckled. He chuckled and chuckled. He had caught Reddy Fox napping, and he felt that this really was something to chuckle over. To find a Fox asleep was something to remember. The black rascal spread his wings and flew back to the Green Meadows where Mrs. Blacky and several children, now as big as their parents, were still hunting breakfast.

"Come with me and I'll show you something you'll seldom see," said Blacky.

The others were about through breakfasting, had nothing in particular to do, and like most folks, were eager to see anything unusual. So they took to their black wings and followed Blacky over to the Old Pasture. All the time Blacky was chuckling softly as if at a secret joke. He flew a little faster than the others. When he was where he could look down on a certain flat rock on the hillside he began to circle, making the circles small so as to keep above the flat rock.

Of course the others knew at once that whatever it was they were to see was on the ground below Blacky. So now they flew a little faster, hurrying to join him. Like most folks, Crows have their full share of curiosity.

"Pooh!" said Mrs. Blacky in a tone of disappointment. "It is only Reddy Fox."

"True, my dear, but what is he doing?" replied Blacky.

Mrs. Blacky had it on the tip of her tongue to say that she guessed he was taking a sun bath, as she often had seen him do, when Blacky spoke again. "He's taking a nap," said he. "He is asleep. When did you ever catch Reddy Fox asleep before?"

It was true. Reddy was asleep right in plain sight on that flat rock in broad daylight. At first Mrs. Blacky thought he was pretending, but after watching him a few minutes she knew that this wasn't so. Reddy was asleep, sound asleep. He was curled up with his nose buried in his bushy tail. When she flew a little over she saw that his eyes were closed. Now and then a black ear twitched when a Fly tickled it. That was the only sign of life.

"Caw!" called Blacky. Reddy didn't wake.

"Caw, caw!" cried Mrs. Blacky. Reddy's nap was unbroken.

"Caw, caw, caw, caw!" cried all the Crows, circling above him. His eyes remained shut. There was no sign that he heard.

Now it happened that Farmer Brown's boy was over in another part of the Old Pasture. He had noticed the circling of the Crows above a certain place and guessed right away that they saw something of interest down below. When they began to caw he was sure of it.

"Those black rascals see some one over there, either some one in trouble or some one they are trying to make trouble for. I wonder if it can be Reddy Fox," thought he and started to try to find out.

Now Farmer Brown's boy long ago learned how to walk softly, making no sound. He learned that the wind is a telltale, carrying scent to keep noses. So now he made sure of the direction the wind was blowing from and then carefully moved until it was in his face and he was walking into it instead of with it. He moved slowly, very slowly, knowing full well how quick many watchful eyes are to see things that move. And so at length he came in sight of the flat rock and Reddy Fox.

Farmer Brown's boy grinned. "I never dreamed I would ever see Reddy napping," thought he. For a few minutes he stood still. Then he moved forward to see how near he could get to Reddy without waking him. Little by little, little by little, he moved as silently as a shadow until he was only a few feet from Reddy. He picked up a stick and broke it. At the snap of the breaking stick Reddy's eyes flew open. Farmer Brown's boy stood perfectly still. Reddy looked at him without seeing him. Reddy looked around suspiciously, but saw no one. He tested the wind. There was nothing suspicious. He yawned and stretched. Farmer Brown's boy laughed and moved. If ever a Fox felt foolish it was Reddy. Farmer Brown's boy laughed again at the look on Reddy's face as he disappeared among the bushes.

"Caw, caw, caw, caw!" cried all the Crows circling above him

"ONE-SUIT" DOUBLES

One of the worst failings of inexperienced players is that of doubling an opponent's overcall on nothing except great length in that one suit. Such doubles are anathema to experts, who have long known that it is impossible to carry out good partnership bidding on the basis of these "one-suit" doubles. Today's deal is typical, illustrating the usual effect of this sort of double.

West dealer
North-South vulnerable.

	♠ Q 6 ♥ 7 5 3 ♦ A Q 8 ♣ A Q J 7 4
♠ A K 7 3 2 ♥ A Q 6 ♦ K J 9 3 ♣ 5	N W E S	♠ 9 4 ♥ 6 2 ♦ 7 4 2 ♣ K 10 9 8 6 2
	♠ J 10 8 5 ♥ K J 10 9 4 ♦ 10 6 5 ♣ 3

The bidding

West	North	East	South
1 ♠	2 ♣	Double	2 ♥
Double	Pass	Pass	Pass

When East doubled two clubs, it was inevitable that his partner should have been trapped into doubling South's rescue bid of two hearts and the outcome, from the East-West point of view, was not salubrious! West opened the king of spades and continued the suit for two more rounds when East high-lowed, and East got in a ruff, but these three tricks were augmented only by West's two trump tricks, and thus the doubled contract was fulfilled, giving North-South the vulnerable game and rubber.

East's double of two clubs was the sort of action that is taken without the slightest thought or anticipation of future developments. The very length of East's club suit indicated as positively as anything can be indicated at bridge, that the opponents must have a better spot at which to play the hands, and under this circumstance even a fairly good pair (which North-South were) is almost sure to find that better spot. Moreover, such a double is often extremely welcome to the next player—South in this case—because he is then justified in making a bid that he could not well have made if his partner's overcall had not been doubled.

Observe that South would have thought twice about bidding two hearts if East had passed; and in any case, observe that West would not have doubled a two-heart bid except on the assumption that he was going to find some defensive help opposite him.
