Her description of scenes and places so interwoven in the life of our Saviour, was followed with rapt attention by each of her listeners.

Fraser, daughter of Mr. John Fraser, Charlottetown. The tests, which include the rescuing of drowning persons, the bringing to shore and proper methods of resuscitation on land were conducted at Carbo Cove this summer during the girls' camp. Besides the life saving certificates the young ladies received a medalion about the size of a 50-cent piece on one side of which is the inscription "Quemcumque Miserum Vidit in Homine Salvavit" with the name of the recipient carved on that side. The reverse side shows a person being saved from drowning. In addition to this the young ladies also received a crest for their bathing suit. It is understood this is to be a yearly event and if so it is to be hoped that next year a large number of the girls attending summer camp will qualify as life savers.

Maritime Ex-Officer Pleads Canadian Youth Be Taught The True History Of The War

The following eloquent plea on behalf of Canadian youth that they be taught the truth of the war and the part played by Canada, was delivered by Lieut. Colonel G. A. Drew at a Maritime ex-officers dinner in St. John on Armistice Day. It deserves to be read and preserved by every Canadian citizen.

I wish to speak to you for a while tonight of the importance of education in relation to the British Empire of the future. By education I do not mean a formal teaching of our schools, but education in its broadest sense—the things that all of us learn from childhood on, about things we meet in contact with from day to day. Most of all I would speak to you of the education of Canadian children, who will be the governing generation of this country tomorrow, and will therefore determine perhaps more than we possibly can the part which Canada will play in the Empire of the future.

We have been nurtured on scintillating sentences descriptive of the Empire's greatness, such as, "The sun never sets on the British Empire," "Her drum beats sounds around the world," "The Empire that girdles the globe," and since we were small children we have sung lustily, "Rule Britannia, Britannia Rules the Waves." These proud sentiments have become so much a part of us that we take them to much for granted, and seldom think how true the sentiment may be and what the future has in store.

Ours is not by any means the first empire the world has ever known. Alexander looked to the East, conquered the Orient and created a great empire in his day of which nothing now remains. Caesar planted the Eagles of Rome over most of the then known world and the Roman Empire today is nothing but history.

of continued repetition of certain words or certain thoughts conveyed by similar words; and also, I believe, we are inclined to forget that words to which we may pay no attention ourselves may be considered important by those who have not the same information which we have about the event which those words describe.

Let me recall to you a few of the statements which are being repeated time and time again. I am not so concerned about isolated statements appearing here and there, no matter how extreme these statements may be; but I am concerned about the statements which one finds repeated over and over again in different forms in these periodicals which may very properly ordinarily be considered to represent the more responsible type of American publication. We read in the Saturday Evening Post, which according to advertising information is supposed to be read by more than 10,000,000 people, that "in the moment of declaring war we began to mobilize our fighting power. Eighteen months later we had on the front against Germany more men than any other nation excepting only France." We read in "Liberty," whose circulation is rapidly approaching that of the Saturday Evening Post, that "a comparison by date from entering into the war shows that we put more troops more quickly in the face of the enemy than did the British, and that in the important last stages of the war we had more men facing the enemy than they had." We are told further by the same magazine that "there is no better proof of how far the people of a nation believe in that nation than the readiness and spirit with which they display in furnishing men for war. The quick action of our country and the slow action of the British Parliament reflected the comparative willingness of the mass of American and British people to fight for their country." We are told by the "Cosmopolitan," which has a circulation considerably in excess of a million, and the third largest circulation of any American magazine coming into Canada, that "the failure of the British forces in France was due to the fact that they refused to move away from the territory along the English channel." And then we find a syndicated article written by John Knox, published in a large number of American weekly newspapers, which amongst much other interesting and inaccurate information has the following to say: "The story of how American brains and manufacturing resources rose to the emergency and produced new methods and weapons, and how American seamen sailed thousands of miles to put these into deadly effect in the story of the winning of the World War.

Matter Of Courage

"No race or people has the monopoly of courage. The waters of the seven seas wash over the bones of thousands of brave men who died in the Great War—and they died under many flags. The only monopoly which developed in the closing months of the great conflict was the American ability to make courage count by supplying it with the best of weapons. That this was done is the only reason that the Woodchopper of Doorn is not sitting on a world's throne today."

And then let me read you a gem published in the "Seattle Star" on March 23 of this year. The newspaper was describing the review of an American Regular Engineer regiment stationed at Fort Lawton, near Seattle. Following a description of the review, it gave the words of the commanding officer when he addressed the regiment after the review. To really appreciate this masterpiece in its way, we must remember that the words were spoken by a Regular Army colonel to men under his command, at their annual inspection, which to any regular unit is an occasion of some celebrity. The newspaper tells us that the review was held on the particular day in March for the purpose, and these are the words of the newspaper itself: "Of commemorating the brave and bloody day when the Sixth Engineers of Fort Lawton successfully stopped the German drive near Amiens, France which had broken through the British troops." Just to digress for a moment, it might be worth while recalling at this point that in March of 1918, the total number of American troops actively engaged at the time mentioned, including all services, was 2,200, and that there were considerably more than 300,000 German troops employed in action mentioned. But let me read you the words of the commanding officer to his men "In March, 1918, the Sixth Engineers were assisting the British army to build bridges. The regiment was comprised of nearly 96 per cent. new men with no trench warfare training.

"The French and British did not believe that the American troops would be able to stand under fire, but when the German drive broke through the veteran British Fifth and Sixth Engineers rushed into the river, was largely attended. The pall bearers were his nephew, Austin Murphy, Alfred Murphy, William Murphy, Peter Murphy, Leeming Murphy and W. W. Murphy. May his soul rest in peace.

Praise For Maritime Winners

TORONTO, Ont., Nov. 22.—Declaring that there was every reason to believe that they would bring back with them the world's championship in cattle judging from Great Britain next year, Hon. Dr. Motherwell, Federal Minister of Agriculture, gave words of sound advice to the three young farm lads who are to represent Canada in the 1930 International Judging Contest.

The three boys, Cedric Kirkpatrick, Gordon Campbell and Clifford Baldwin, from New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Ontario respectively were the central figures tonight at a banquet given in honor of the boys and girls livestock club contestants by W. D. Robb, vice-president of the Canadian National Railway, under whose auspices the contestants are visiting Toronto, where they have been competing for the last two days.

It is under the joint auspices of Dr. Motherwell's department, and the C. N. R. that the three boys will have the trip to Britain for the world contest next summer. Both vice president Robb and Dr. Motherwell took occasion to congratulate the three boys who are the first to win the honor for Canada. The theme of Dr. Motherwell's address to the boys was service to others in their future lives. There was no question he said that these boys would become leaders in their communities and there rested a great responsibility upon them in seeing that they carried on to others in the coming years what had been handed down to them from the Federal, Provincial and railway authorities. The Federal Minister said that this work was most valuable and praised particularly what the railway company had been able to do for the young farmers.

Mr. Robb in his annual address to the club members said that the winners being honored represented nearly six thousand farm club members in Canada and the movement was growing. It had been invaluable in raising the status of the livestock industry in the Dominion and the railway was only too glad to be of service in this regard. Dr. Black, director of colonization and agriculture for the C. N. R. told of the policy

IN MEMORIAM

MR. PETER MURPHY

There passed away in peace at his home in Millvale, on the morning of November 9th, Mr. Peter Murphy, in the 79th year of his age. The deceased had been in failing health for the past two years, yet the end came suddenly and brought sadness to the community in which his long life was spent in peace with his fellow-men. Upright and honest in all his dealings, he won the respect and confidence of all with whom he came in contact. Of a kindly nature, he extended a common hospitality to friend and traveller. Charitable in a marked degree, he contributed generously to every worthy cause; not forgetting the church of which he was a faithful member.

During his illness he was comforted by frequent visits of his pastor, Rev. Wm. V. McDonald, who administered to him the last rites of the church on the evening previous to his death.

He leaves to mourn a sorrowing widow, one brother James A. Murphy, and one sister, Mrs. Julius Pahnke, both of Boston.

His funeral, on the morning of November 11, to St. Ann's Church, Hope
