60,000 Boo As Dodgers Defeat Giants

NEW YORK, Aug. 3—(AP)—Under dramatic circumstances which brought sustained boos from a great crowd of 60,000 persons, Brooklyn Dodgers beat New York Giants 7-4 tonight in an army relief game ended by a ninth-inning rally by the Giants.

The disapproval of the crowd over the way the contest ended was expressed in a demonstration that continued after all lights in the Polo Grounds had been extinguished except a spotlight which lighted the American flag while an orchestra played the Star Spangled Banner in what had been intended for a stirring and patriotic closing ceremony.

The impetus for the Dodgers' triumph had been furnished by Dixie Walker's fourth round-ripper of the season with two aboard in the third inning and by Dolph Camilli's grand slam smash which knocked the former Flatbusher, Van Lingle Mungo, out of the box in the fifth.

By Whitney Martin (Associated Press Sports Writer)

NEW YORK, Aug. 3—(AP)—Tummy Armour and Joe Kirkwood didn't go for the numbers in the recent Tam O'Shanter tournament at Chicago and although this is what-of-it bit of information, it has its interesting angles, particularly as it is something of a blight on the golf pro's policy of always going out of their way to please the public.

Armour and Kirkwood refused to wear the identifying numbers which tournament officials provided on the theory that, although the players might be well acquainted with themselves, there might be a spectator or two who couldn't tell Armour from Hagan or Sarazen.

We don't know what was in the minds of the two rebels, but there are various possible reasons for their action, among them—

1. An unflattering conceit which made it inconceivable to them that anybody wouldn't recognize them and that forcing them to wear identifying numbers was the same as hanging a sign bearing the letters C-O-W on the side of a cow at a dairy exhibit.

2. They honestly believed that such identification was beneath the dignity of their profession, putting them in the class of box cars or rogues gallery exhibits.

3. They saw a chance for a little left-handed publicity.

We have an idea that No. three comes closer to the real reason. Here were two facing veterans who didn't figure to come very close to winning and whose names would be noted only if you read far enough down in the agile type listing the scores. By doing something out of the ordinary they would get their pictures, which you possibly saw in the papers, or draw much comment, such as this: "That Kirkwood, of all men, should be a party to such a rebellion is unusual, for years he has earned his living as a golf exhibitionist, touring the world with his bag of tricks. He always has been the centre of attention at his shows, and maybe it does his pride a little to know that he is just another number when a big tournament rolls around."

We have a hunch that Freddy Corcoran, P.G.A. tournament manager, endorsed the numbering plan wholeheartedly. He's wise enough to know that the paying public is the backbone of tournament golf, and that anything that can be done to aid the spectators' enjoyment is on the pro-

ON WATCH IN MOUTH OF ST. LAWRENCE

The navigating officer checks the position of his corvette on patrol against sporadic U-boat attacks in the St. Lawrence estuary. Behind him stands the vessel's commanding officer. Both wear protective sheepskin clothing against the cold river weather. Recently on ocean escort duty, their warship was ordered into the vital estuary as the enemy used nuisance-raids to divert attention from his main attack on Atlantic convoys.

NAVY PATROLS MISTY ST. LAWRENCE

Three Canadian war vessels seek out a reported enemy submarine in the extensive estuary of the St. Lawrence. Leading is a heavy Bangor ocean-mine-sweeper followed by a corvette and a second Bangor. Their appearance is just released by the Navy, this new type has been found particularly effective, forming a much needed addition to the R.C.N. Many ships have been diverted to protect river traffic, although the main force of the enemy attack continues to be directed against Atlantic ocean merchant shipping.

(Harold Freeman, Canadian Press Staff Writer, has just made a trip through the river and Gulf of St. Lawrence in an Allied convoy. In this story Freeman tells about a hitherto-secret anti-submarine ship of the Royal Canadian Navy.)

ABOARD A CANADIAN WARSHIP, Aug. 3—(CP)—A lethal type of heavy-duty anti-submarine ship is helping guard Canada's St. Lawrence highway to the sea working in close cooperation with the already famous corvettes and the more recently acquired fairhairs.

The ships hitherto strictly on the secret list of the Royal Canadian navy, are the Bangors—compact fighting units that carry a deadly sting for submarines operating on the surface or below. Already the new ships, like the corvettes distinctively Canadian in construction, have proved their effectiveness under the exciting conditions of actual combat. The men who sail them are unanimously high in praise of their ships and predict that once the full story can be told the Bangors will equal, or even outshine, the corvettes.

It is indeed high approval of a ship's anti-submarine qualities to place her on a par with a corvette for the corvette is playing an outstanding part in the grim battle of the sealanes who the men who place the Bangors at the top are the officers and crews who have worked both types and know the qualities of each.

Specifications A Secret

Specifications of these deadly fighting craft would make interesting reading for the enemy, for there are still many features of the Bangors that the enemy has not solved. Already they have found

One Dead, 12 Injured In Blaze

MONTREAL, Aug. 3—(CP)—Mrs. A. Cote, 42, was crushed to death and 12 others injured, none seriously, in a panic that followed a small fire outbreak tonight in the Grande Staircase, opposite the Montreal Royals ball park in the east end.

Mrs. Cote was in an audience of 2,000 persons at an "amateur night" variety show in the semi-outdoor stadium when a small fire broke out under the south wooden stands.

Despite the efforts of entertainers and arriving firemen, a panic started and in a crush at one of the exits, Mrs. Cote and 12 others were trampled on.

Squads of police and ambulances converged on the scene and the injured were taken to nearby hospitals. Some of them were treated on the spot.

The fire, of unknown origin, was quickly extinguished with little damage.

Meantime across the street in the big baseball park Montreal Royals were playing an inter-league exhibition game with Baltimore Orioles.

Witnesses said that as soon as the blaze was discovered the audience rushed to the doors in one mass, many screaming frantically. They said that only one stream of water was required to bring the small blaze under control.

By then, however, the panic was on. Only a very few actually suffered from smoke or received minor burns. The remainder of the audience received their injuries in the crush at the exits.

Those who were not taken to hospital for treatment were attended by doctors on the scene.

Double Cross in Betting Leads To Fatal Shootings

NEW YORK, Aug. 3 (AP)—A "double cross" over 1940 United States Presidential election bets led today, authorities said, to the fatal shooting of two Broadway gamblers in a bridge club.

Approximately 12 hours after Robert B. Greene, 40, and Morris Wolenski, 44, partners in gambling, fell dead of bullet wounds beside the card table around which they were playing at the White House bridge association's clubrooms, police arrested Max Fox, 48, another betting commissioner, said five minutes after police began questioning Fox he admitted the slaying, an assistant district attorney, Louis A. Pagnucci, said.

Police said Fox, married and the father of three children, told the story.

When bets were being made on the right and left on the outcome of the Roosevelt-Wilkie campaign, Fox set up Greene as a betting commissioner with a $300,000 fund. Greene was offering odds on Wilkie, the Republican candidate, but, noticing a trend in the campaign, started "hedging" the Wilkie bets to get even.

After President Roosevelt's re-election, Greene showed Fox the original books with bets on Wilkie, Wilkie's election indicating that they were ruined as betting commissions.

Fox accepted Greene's statements until he noticed that Greene continued to have money

She's a west coast ship, product of north Vancouver yards. In 30 months since she was commissioned she has travelled 30,000 miles on two oceans and the St. Lawrence. She has had brushes with the enemy, possibly not entirely without success, has done rescue and demolition work under highly dangerous conditions, withstood the buffeting and has come only from long periods of service on the Nova Atlantic in winter.

She's been around, but after 30,000 miles she has yet to have her first overhaul and never yet has repair work kept her in port when she was needed elsewhere. And she's typical of an ever-increasing fleet of Bangors.

The necessity of keeping these ships' qualities and equipment a secret from the enemy as long as possible has robbed the Bangors of much of the fame they deserve. But some day the balance sheet will be made public and when that riding class of the Bangors will be at the top of the list of successful fighting ships.

BRITAIN'S 3,000 PIG CLUBS

Eighty new pig clubs are being formed in Britain each week. The pigs are kept mainly on waste food. The "porkopast" system puts 53,000 the 3,000th club registered by the Small Pig Keepers' Council a few weeks ago.

About 9,000 tons of bacon or pork, or 80,000,000 4 ounce ration, are produced each year by these amateur pigkeepers and a good half of this goes into the pot for the general public. The rest is the reward of the pig club members who are in the fortunate households the meat from their own pigs, representing a 3 pound joint of meat each week.

Workers in hundreds of war factories are finding that a pig club attached to their canteen means not only extra meat, but choice meals of pork or bacon which otherwise they would not see. Providing the club sells half its pigs to the Ministry of Food, the remainder can be killed for consumption without affecting the canteen's normal meat allocation.

Schools, hospitals, fire and police stations are all joining in the movement to turn kitchen and garden waste into food for next winter. Firemen have organized pig clubs among their parishioners, and many local "pubs" have their clubs. On farms, usually far from restaurants, the workers are avoiding meatless days by making use of empty sties and other buildings.

Some of the clubs are run cooperatively, the pigs being kept in a communal sty and owned jointly by the members, but others are a hand in looking after them and collecting the swill. Others are pig-owners' clubs, in which each member keeps his own pigs on his own premises.

Most of the people forming clubs today previously knew little or nothing about keeping pigs, but all assistance and advice has been given special supplementary meal allowances and insurance facilities are provided by the Small Pig Keepers' Council, Henley-on-Thames.
