The Third Warning
A Mystery Love Story

By Augustus Mack

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE
Ronny Drysdale, about to start on a hunting trip with his pal, George Collier, finds his plans changed by his lawyer, who tells him he had fallen heir to an estate and title in Scotland. The men decide to visit the estate and a series of startling events take place. Approaching the apparently empty Brackenbridge Hall, they find strange visitors seeking something in the former laird's desk. There is a fight, but the intruders escape, next day a Mr. Seymore appears, wanting to rent the hall, and Ronny recognizes him as one of the intruders.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

I Make an Important Decision
I had just enough presence of mind to say "Good morning". But not another word after that could I utter. Seymore moved easily across the room and pushed forward an armchair, bidding me be seated. The first thing that helped me to recover my self-possession was the growing certainty that Mr. Seymore had no idea I was the disturber of his peace little more than twelve hours previously. I recollected that of course he had the candle-light in his eyes, that George and I were at the other end of the room, and that he had extinguished the light the moment I shouted. So I got my breath and recovered my poise.

"I've just come from Blair & Ballantyne," I began, "and they tell me you have made an offer for a lease of my house, Brackenbridge Hall." Mr. Seymore inclined his head. "I have made an offer." "A cigar, sir?" He pushed over a box of coronas, which I declined; and while he lit one for himself I continued:

"Mr. Blair thought it a good idea if we met and had a preliminary chat about things."

"A good idea," nodded Mr. Seymore, hospitably adding: "May I offer a drink? What cocktail shall I bring for?" "I hate to take your drink," I said with a laugh, "because I've come along to say I don't think I'll accept your offer for the Hall."

Mr. Seymore chuckled softly and waved a chubby hand, on the little finger of which sparkled a deep red gem.

"Two martinis," he said into the telephone beside the matelpeice; "Mr. Seymore's sitting room." And he dropped back into his armchair and took a long, comfortable pull at his cigar.

"It's a lovely spot, Brackenbridge," he said in his staccato voice, exhaling a white cloud. "I knew it well. Do you know it all, Mr.—he glanced at my card on the table beside me—"Mr. Drysdale?"

"Just passed through it," I said very much on the quiver. I wondered whether, after all, he didn't suspect the truth, and this were his first feeler. But his next remark took a different tack:

"I lived in the hotel in the village for a bit. I fish a little, but it's water-color sketching I'm really fond of, you know. The country roundabout is a paradise for the water-colorist. But, of course, I got fed up with that hotel."

TERRIBLE SUFFERING
Day And Night With Eczema

Mrs. Martin E. Giesbrecht, Winkler, Man., writes:—"I have used with good results for eczema. My face and shoulders were simply covered with blotches of this terrible disease. "Nothing did me any good until I took your medicine and it has relieved me of the terrible suffering I had to go through day and night."

"One would," I said politely. "The best of 'em fall after a bit."
"Quite. Well of course I didn't want to leave the district, so I hunted round a bit and in the end got digs. And there I've stuck for about a year! Oh, they're homely enough, in all conscience. Not like this." He pointed around to the pleasant room and mumbled quietly. "Ah, here are our drinks! You very good health, Mr. Drysdale. Here's to our better acquaintance."
I reciprocated; and as he seemed bent on talking about himself, I waited for him to continue.

MAKES AN OFFER

"He's the factor of the estate," I agreed, recognizing the name. "So Blair told me just now."
"Quite," said Mr. Seymore, "between ourselves, a bit of a surly dog," he added confidentially, "but as Forsyth and I never come across each other, the state of his liver doesn't worry me. I've spent a very quiet and happy year there, and now I want my affairs wound up—I'm an Eastern merchant—and settle down permanently. Permanently." "At Brackenbridge Hall!" He laughed again, and leaned forward, resting his elbow on his knees and regarding me with a challenging smile. "Now, Mr. Drysdale, what about it?"

"I'm most awfully sorry," I said. "I really can't make up my mind now. But I promise you'll hear from the lawyer people in a couple of days."

"You'll have another drink, of course, before you go?"
His hand was on the telephone, but I stayed him in time.

"In a couple of days," I said, bidding him good-by. "You'll hear. Not longer, I promise."
"I'm returning to my rooms at the farm on Monday. It's possible we may meet then," he said slowly. With a confident smile. "By that time I think you'll have decided to accept my offer. At least I have my hopes. Good-by."

Community Spirit

The box office at the Prince Edward Theatre presented a very animated appearance yesterday morning when the plan was opened for "Whoa" which is being presented by the Orpheus Eight on Monday and Tuesday under the auspices of the Rotary Club, in aid of crippled children.

That some who desired certain seats for the first night were unable to secure them goes without saying when due consideration is given to the ambitious programme of those who have the sale of coupons in hand, whereby they hope to fill the Theatre both Monday and Tuesday nights with a matinee on Monday for the children.

The kindly manner in which citizens generally have accepted the overtures of those selling tickets; the magnificent co-operation of the school and convent authorities and teachers in arranging to let the children out at 2.30 P. M. Monday to attend the Matinee, and their willingness to assist in the sale of tickets, is much appreciated and affords indication of splendid success.

The "Community Spirit" receives another boost at the hands of the Gryo Club when the entire membership of that body requested tickets for themselves and their wives, 3-27-11.
