It was love at first sight at the Capitol Theatre last night as an enthusiastic audience of first-nighters gave their hearty approval to Warner Bros.' latest and brightest film romance, "Too Young To Know." Co-starring Joan Leslie and Robert Hutton and featuring such capable supporting players as Dolores Moran, Rosemary DeCamp and Harry Davenport, the film marks Hollywood's first attempt to handle the timely problem of kismet-run marriages with intelligence, understanding and humor. But more than that - more than merely resting on its laurels after posing an arresting problem - the film also contains a neat and cheerfully engaging object lesson for thousands of today's youngsters who jump first into marriage and do their thinking afterwards.

Adapted from Harlan Ware's much discussed Saturday Evening Post serial, "Too Young To Know" is the full and light-hearted story of a young love, from its carefree beginning, through hasty marriage into the turbulent years that follow. In typical American fashion, the play races, tugs-of-war and barrel races added much to the success of the much anticipated affair. A number of pupils from Alberton South, Kildare and other schools also participated in the various sports. Mr. Hierarchy, Principal of the school, and the committee in charge are to be commended on the efficient manner in which the sports were conducted.

Dr. J. D. Cummins, who has been suffering from the effects of an accident, when he accidentally slipped on the icy sidewalk near his home a little over a month ago, is speedily recovering from his prolonged indisposition.
