The Dennistoun Case

joined the Royal Scots Fusiliers, and in 1898 got a commission in the militia. In 1901 he again went out to South Africa, and was there for 17 months during the war there. He returned home, and in 1903 contracted pneumonia. Later on he suffered from neuritis, and had not been in perfect health since. Before his marriage to the plaintiff he had taken and furnished the flat 18 Wellington-court, which was ready for their occupation on the day of the wedding. The plaintiff brought her schoolroom furniture with her, and together she and he bought things all over the place. His father paid for most of the things and the plaintiff had all the receipts. He was told by his father that he had paid £4,500 for the furniture and the doing-up of the flat. In his opinion the furniture was worth about £2,000 or £2,500. When the flat at 177 Queen's-gate, was taken the furniture from Wellington-court went there, and to the best of his knowledge it was still there in the possession of the plaintiff. The marriage settlement was executed in November, 1910.

The witness was referred to his letter of November 14, 1920, in which he wrote, "Rightly or wrongly, I have given way to you in everything. You loved someone else for a few months after our marriage and took him to our home when I was away on guard." The witness said that it was absolutely true that Oscar Senhouse had been taken to his house by the plaintiff as was stated in the letter.

Mr. Birkett.—How did you know that? Through one of my brother officers.

The witness said that he had seen that the bed in his room had been slept in, and the plaintiff told him that Oscar Senhouse had been there. She said that she had been out with Oscar, who had lost his key and could not get home, and she had taken him back to the flat. (The witness) did not think anything about it at the time.

Counsel.—Did she at any time tell you about her attitude towards Oscar Senhouse?—Yes, she told me, after I had spoken to her, that she was very fond of him and had misbehaved herself with him.

His Lordship.—When was this?—Some time during 1911.

Mr. Birkett.—What attitude did you take towards that?—It was no use taking any attitude. She was a much more dominant figure than I was all the way through. She told me everything where she had been and what she had done.

His Lordship.—What age was Senhouse?—About my wife's age. He was a young man.

A Certain Amount of Pride

Mr. Birkett.—Why did not you take strong lines about it?—I had married against my father's will. If I had chosen I could have divorced her during 1911, but my father had said that he objected very strongly to Mrs. Dennistoun because of her family, and I had a certain amount of pride so I protected her all the way through.

The witness said he returned to England on January 1, 1913, leaving his wife in the North. After he had been to Jamaica, where he was A. D. C. to General Manning, the Governor, she told him that she had been on a motor tour with Senhouse in Wales and had had great difficulty in making up her mind as to whether she would go off with him, but that she had decided that she would stick to her husband. Senhouse returned from Australia at the end of 1914 or the beginning of 1915.

Can't Keep House Without Minard's

1915 to go to the front, and he was killed at the Battle of Loos in a raid on the trenches in the autumn of 1915. The plaintiff afterwards told him that she was staying with Lord and Lady Rosslyn at Calcott Park, and that she had been with Senhouse from 4.30 in the morning. When the death of Senhouse was announced she and the witness were at The Chantry, Bishops Stortford. While they were there a telegram arrived from Eveline Lady Miller of Manders-ton informing them of the occurrence, and his wife had a total breakdown. She was crying in his arms for three-quarters of an hour while he was trying to comfort her.

Destroyed Correspondence

Mr. Birkett.—How comes it that there are no letters from your wife in this case?—In 1919 she asked me to destroy them. There were some letters of her lying about in a room where we were staying in Paris and we destroyed them together as she said that it was very dangerous to leave letters lying about.

Mr. Birkett.—These letters from you have been produced against you. What do you say her letters to you would have shown?—They would have shown the sequence, and if her letters to me had not been destroyed she could never have produced them.

Do your letters of themselves present a true picture?—No.

The witness went on to say that in 1913, under the settlement of 1910, his father was allowing them £800 a year. His pay as captain in the Grenadier Guards was at that time about £420, and his wife's income was between £200 and £300 a year. The £800 a year ceased in March, 1913, because of the bank failure, and they were left with his pay and her small private income. The rent of the flat at Wellington-court was £400. Owing to their reduced circumstances he set out to look for a job and went to the War Office and saw Sir John French, as he was at that time, but he could do nothing for him then.

Mr. Birkett.—A captaincy in the Grenadier Guards, was that an expensive thing to keep up?—It was not cheap. I was a member of the King's Company. My father had always come to my rescue and used to give me a cheque book on the bank.

The witness said that his next post was the one in Jamaica.

Mr. Birkett.—Tell us how it was obtained.

The witness.—It was obtained by Eveline Lady Miller inviting myself and my wife to meet Sir John Cowans.

That was your first meeting?—Yes, the luncheon party. We knew that General Manning was just about to go to Jamaica. I could not have got that job in Jamaica without assistance from a senior officer, and it was through Sir John Cowans that I got it.

Was General Manning in England?—Yes, at the time.

Did General Cowans give you anything that day?—No, that day, but it was through him that I went to see General Manning, and through him that I got the post. General Cowans arranged it with General Manning.

You went out as military secretary to General Manning?—As extra A.D.C.

The witness said that that was a third grade staff appointment, and the pay attached to it was about £300 a year. They lived at King's House, Jamaica, with the Governor, and everything was found. When he went to Jamaica his father remained behind. They had let the flat to Major Erskine Loder at the same rent that they themselves were paying. The witness went out to Jamaica some six weeks later. At that time they owed about £1,400, the majority of which were his own debts. In Jamaica he and his wife discussed the matter, and the agreement of May 5, 1913, which was drawn up in England, was come to by which he assigned his benefit in the furniture to his wife.

Counsel took the witness through the items in the statement of claim and she denied that they were all debts incurred by him.

His Lordship.—It is said that on May 16, 1923, you paid your wife £100 in account of these debts?—I did not, my Lord.

Mr. Birkett.—Did anything occur in Jamaica which made you suspicious about your wife?—Well, she had a miscarriage.

What did you say to her?—I did not adopt any different attitude from what I had adopted before. I had no control over her at all as far as her morals were concerned.

The witness said that by the mortgage of October 8, 1913, he was in the position of a surety as between himself and the plaintiff, and principal debtor as between himself and Sir John Miller. The £1,000 advanced by Sir John had been repaid to his estate by the plaintiff. He (the witness) received none of it.

Mr. Birkett.—Down to the end of 1913 did you love your wife in spite of all that had happened?—I did, very much indeed.

Mr. Birkett.—After the document of May, 1913, to whom did the furniture belong?—To the best of my knowledge it belonged to her.

Did you expect to be asked to return any of the £1,000?—No; but I would have given her the money if she had asked for it.

His Lordship.—Your view was that this was not a loan to you by your wife?—No, my Lord.

The witness said that when he returned from Jamaica in November, 1914, he was still a captain in the Grenadier Guards. General

Manning gave him a letter to Sir John and he went up and saw Sir John Cowans. It was a report recommending him for an appointment on the staff. At that time he had been a regular officer 14 years and a militia officer and a trooper before that. As soon as they arrived in England from Jamaica he and his wife went to the War Office.
