In a recent issue of The Guardian in reporting the proceedings of a case of Campbell vs Kelly and Trainor the title of the case was so written that the word defendant, was applied alone to Mr Kelly, it was shown that the defendant owed certain sums of money to the complainant and the omission of the second defendant's name, the actual debtor, might have left the impression on the reader that it was Mr Kelly who was the indebted party. This was not the case.

The first appearance of Ralph F. Bragg at the People's Theatre last evening augurs well for the success of his engagement here. He has a splendid voice, clear and strong, and his enunciation is perfect. He possesses the quality of voice which fills the hall while maintaining a marvelous sweetness unmarred with the volume which is required to make words distinct in a large building like the People's Theatre, and his songs last evening were splendid selections. His rendition of "What's the Matter with Father" as an illustrated bit of fun, was grand, and My Irish Maid showed his versatility to perfection. It is a matter of congratulation to the manager of the Theatre that such a supply could be obtained at such short notice.
