

FISHERS AS FIGHTERS

The first month of the war showed that the fleet was deficient in mine-sweepers, though, of course, with the new trawlers and drifters and carriers of the Dogger Bank, the Iceland and White Sea fishermen were called upon, and the surplus men of the fleet drafted back to their old service.

But the fishermen warriors proved real sleuths; every certain evidence of the passing submarine was noted—the even waves in calm weather, the sudden breaking wave when there was a capful of wind, the scared seafowl, the tiny plume of water where the periscope cut its way.

The trawler soon gained the mastery of this monster of the under sea, and will continue to hold it despite the new invention of the enemy. There is an invention which assists the location of underwater craft, the coming of which swept von Tirpitz's invisible fleet from his grasp.

The latest development of the enemy compelled the men who use the Dogger Bank to become warriors. Fishing craft have always been theoretically immune from sinking, now they are to be sunk on sight. But we shall see the raider jerking out his machine guns just a few seconds late, for the fisherman warrior, bereft of all other weapons, will certainly use the full power of his tiny craft to ram and destroy the enemy.

Knocks Obstinate Coughs in a Hurry

A Simple Home-Made Remedy That Gets at the Cause.

Thousands of people normally healthy in every other respect, are annoyed with a persistent, irritating, chronic cough year after year, disturbing their sleep and making life disagreeable. It's so needless—there's an old home-made remedy that will end such a cough easily and quickly.

Get from any druggist "2 1/2 ounces of Pinex" (10 cents worth), pour it into a 16-oz. bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. Begin taking it at once. Gradually but surely you will notice the phlegm thin out and then disappear altogether, thus ending a cough that will never be thought of again.

Frederick Palmer writes from British Headquarters in France as follows: An uncanny curiosity gives the soldiers their incentive for trench raids. Ordinarily they never see their enemy hidden in his burrows across No Man's Land from their own burrows.

You would not think of sending a shabbily dressed, dirty-faced boy to your valued customers to act as your dignified representative.

It is even more unbusiness-like to address an ordinary printed circular letter bearing a message to your customers, because it is a reflection on their better judgment.

Every letter you send out should be either type-written or printed by the Multiphraph Process, (and you can't tell one from the other.)

A letter produced by the Multiphraph Printing Service is identical to typewriting in every respect. It is printed from an invariable type, printed through a ribbon making the appearance and effect of the finished product the same.

There is nothing more effective than a direct personal letter to your customers. This letter can be produced by the Multiphraph Way at a very nominal cost. You can have a hundred printed—or ten thousand, as you wish. The last copy will be as legible as the first.

Let us tell you more about it. Guardian Pub. Co. Charlottetown

CAPTAIN "P.W." IS GOOD ROYAL SOLDIER

Heir to Empire's Throne Has "Grown His Beard" in War—in Egypt—in Summer

When the Prince of Wales got short leave to go to Buckingham Palace to say "Good-bye" to his brothers and sister before going to the front, Prince John asked him: "What are you going to do when you get there, David?"—David being the name by which he is called at home. "David" rubbed his chin and smiled.

"I think I'll grow a beard for one thing," he answered. Figuratively speaking, the Prince of Wales has "grown a beard" since the war began—that is to say, he has ceased to be a boy and has become a man.

He has become tremendously popular with all ranks because he has done his job without any suggestion that he was being favored on account of his rank. That he has taken his chances like everyone else is proved by the fact that it is almost seventeen months since he went out as second lieutenant, and he has only just been given his captaincy.

As captain, the Prince of Wales, or "P.W.," as they called him on the western front, went to Egypt, and Egypt with the summer coming on was not exactly the spot people hankering after "cushy jobs"—as the army expresses it—pine for! But, then, as a certain Tommy writing home put it: "The Prince of Wales is not very big, but he has got a bigger heart than a lot I know at home."

One of the best pen pictures of the Prince comes from a distinguished French author, who had opportunities of seeing him at the front. Here it is: "A party of British are just finishing lunch; they do not break off their subdued conversation at the appearance of a soldier who, pipe in mouth, advances and listens to them; he has no ribbon, no officer's stripes, no badge, no insignia. He is not tall, very slender, even a little frail but for his firm carriage; the peak of his cap low over his forehead, crook-handled walking stick hanging on his arm, wrists protected by warm woolen mittens—a young man, blue-eyed, fresh-cheeked, clear-complexioned."

There is nothing aggressive about the personality of "P.W.," but he has a quiet way of standing no nonsense. One day at the front he was on duty watching transport wagons being filled. Packages were being thrown up to the man in the wagon whose duty it was to count them out loudly, pausing as each fresh twenty-five packages were reached. The man in question "dropped in" with the Prince; to save himself trouble he started calling out "twenty-five" when he should have been saying "twenty." But it did not work.

"Twenty-five already," said the Prince blandly. "I make it twenty. One of us is wrong. Just unload the beginning again."

DEADLY TRENCH RAIDS

Germans Adopt Clever British Ruse—Curiosity the Reason

Frederick Palmer writes from British Headquarters in France as follows: An uncanny curiosity gives the soldiers their incentive for trench raids. Ordinarily they never see their enemy hidden in his burrows across No Man's Land from their own burrows. Unseen bullets from unseen snipers crack overhead. Unseen guns steadily concentrate in a deluge of shells. For months this sort of thing goes on and the trenches of the adversaries remain always in the same place; the grim monotony of casualties and watching continues. This aroused the desire to "get at" the enemy which the trench raid satisfies. It means that you are going to spring over your parapet and rush across No Man's Land into the very houses of the enemy and man to man on his doorstep prove whether you are a better man than he is.

To go over the parapet ordinarily means death. In order to make any such rush there must be "interference," as they say in football, and the barb wire in front of the enemy's trench must be cut. This is usually done by the guns, which become more and more deadly in their ability to turn accurate sprays of destruction on given points. They cover the rush and they cover the return of the raiders with their prisoners.

But the guns are not all; there is all kinds of organized trickery in order to enable a body of soldiers to get into the enemy's trenches for a few minutes of activity, when the invaders throw themselves on their invaders at such close quarters that it is a question if even a revolver is now a practical weapon. You cannot throw it over a traverse and you can't aim it. Running into a German around the corner of a traverse, a blow may be better than a shot.

There have been trench raids where every man who went out was responsible for a casualty or prisoner, while the raiders' own loss was not one in ten to the enemy's. There are also failures. Success requires right. The British inaugurated trench raiding, which the Germans promptly imitated. Where its development will end no one dares venture to say. One advantage of any raid is that those who return are bound to bring back some information of value to the intelligence corps.

ALFONSO GOES BETWEEN

Anxious Relatives of All Nations Offered Royal Aid

Describing the great work of relieving some of the suffering and anxiety of the war which is being carried out by King Alfonso of Spain, an Englishwoman writes from Madrid: The Royal Palace of Madrid has been the scene of many strange events in the course of its chequered history, and to-day something is happening there which may not, indeed, arrest the attention of the historian, but which will leave a lasting impression in many a home throughout the length and breadth of Europe.

Each letter is docketed, indexed, and filed according to the subject matter and the country of origin, and acknowledged by return of post. The request is then forwarded with full particulars to the Spanish legation in London, the Spanish legation in Berlin, the Spanish legation in Vienna, and through them to the German or Austrian Governments. The reply, as soon as received, is conveyed in a carefully worded letter to the inquirer, often anticipating by a telegram if the news is good and accompanied by the King's personal condolence; in this case the bad news is conveyed through the priest or the mayor of the parish, so that it may be broken gently and opportunely. Some idea of the extent of the work may be gathered from the fact that nearly 200,000 letters have already been dealt with from France alone, while the postal and telegraphic expenses are said to have amounted in two months to about $3,000.

British Save Matches

The British war tax on matches has caused a great uproar in domestic circles. The jump from seven to sixteen cents per dozen makes it really a fair percentage less than the ordinary price for common matches in other countries, but the householder in England is crying aloud. Jones who formerly used about two small boxes to keep one ordinary pipe alight, now saves all the wasted matches and keeps them in his bedroom cabinet, ready to light his cigarettes when he smokes in bed. If Thompson drops a match out of box on the way home of a night, a posse of constables are called up and search with night lanterns is made until the missing stick is recovered. Housewives save and hide matches in all sorts of unexpected places, and if children are caught wasting or stealing matches they are spanked with severity.

Bumble Bees as Bait

The use of the live bumble bee as trout bait is rather common in some sections. The common grasshopper, if small and bright colored, is one of the best of trout lures.

A 15 YEARS' FIRE

Just think! That is the time through which Mr. H. C. Buckley endured all the fiery tortures of itching, burning eczema. His life was a perfect misery until Zam-Buk—the great herb skin cure—brought complete relief.

Mr. Buckley, who lives at 461 East Broadway, Portland, Oregon, writes: "For fifteen years I suffered with eczema, and although I tried many so-called 'eczema cures,' nothing seemed capable of dealing with a case like mine. It was not until I had Zam-Buk recommended to me that I began to have hope. This wonderful skin healer soon brought about a change for the better. As I persevered with Zam-Buk the burning sensation got less. I found Zam-Buk wonderfully soothing. Gradually the patches of soreness and the inflammation were reduced, and complete and permanent cure finally resulted. I would strongly advise all afflicted with eczema to give Zam-Buk a trial. It will give them satisfaction. They will not be disappointed."

No skin disease can resist the potent healing forces stored up in Zam-Buk, which is unequalled for old wounds, skin abscesses, bad eczema, scalds, burns, cuts and all skin injuries. All druggists and stores, or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, 50c. box.
