NEW MUSIC BLENDS CLASSIC AND JAZZ

NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—(CP)—A new form of music, representing a blend of the classics with jazz, is rapidly finding favor in North America, said a speaker at the annual convention of the National Association of Music Merchants here.

M. H. Berlin, president of a Chicago musical instrument company, cited the music of the late George Gershwin as an illustration of the native music he meant. The new musical form may be likened to the light classics, he added.

Sounder musical education in United States schools, he prophesied, will soon have the result that almost everyone in the country will derive pleasure from music, either by listening or playing.

BROWN-HOLDER BISCUITS GO TO THE FAR NORTH

Orders received from Hudson's Bay Company and Royal Canadian Mounted Police

For the fourth consecutive year The Hudson's Bay Company have placed a large order with Brown-Holder Biscuits, Limited, of Moncton, for Maritime Maid biscuits to be shipped to the far north. This is a record of which The Brown-Holder Company is justly proud for it provides proof that Brown-Holder products stand the test of the rigorous climate of the Arctic regions.

Further evidence of the popularity of the Maritime Maid biscuits is provided by an order from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police also for shipment to the far north. Among the places to which shipments have lately been made are the following: Port Harrison, Chesterfield Inlet, Eskimo Point, Lake Harbor, Pond Inlet, Pangnirtung and Craig Harbor. Included in the orders sent to these places were Pilot and sweet biscuits, the latter consisting of Arrowroot, Select Tea, Vanilla Wafers, Ginger Nuts, Digestive, Molasses Snaps, Petit Beurre, Coco Snaps, Coco Fingers and Sultanas.

Evidently the Mounted Police as well as the Eskimos eat and enjoy the delicious products of the Brown-Holder factory.

Two Girls Saved From Rising Tide CARLISLE, England, Aug. 8 — Two 15 year old Carlisle girls have positive faith in guardian angels after their harrowing experience on a sandbank near Port Carlisle. The girls, Margaret Stewart and Vera Dunke'd, were spending the evening at the seaside and ventured too far across the sands. Before they realized their predicament they were trapped by the incoming tide. For three hours they shouted frantically for aid as the water crept higher and higher. Weak from their efforts and with the water over their shoulders they had resigned themselves to certain death. "We just prayed and cried," Margaret said after the exhausted girls were finally rescued. Their plight was noticed by a motorist on the Scottish shore at Eastrepps, who was scanning the firth through binoculars. He rushed to a fisherman's cottage and a boat was quickly launched. The girls were taken to hospital where they were treated for shock.

The higher you climb, the more you need

As your salary increases and you raise your standard of living, your life insurance protection should be raised accordingly. Then your family will not suffer too great a drop in their standard of living in the event of your death.

It is this natural desire to provide financial security commensurate with one's standard of living that explains why so many Confederation Life policies are taken by those who are already policyholders. They bought their first policy when they were comparatively young. Then, as their earning powers increased, they realized their greater obligations and knew that the easiest, quickest and safest way to meet increasing obligations was to increase their life insurance.

If you wish to have a Plan of Insurance to cover present requirements and to anticipate future needs, consult the Confederation Life about it.

A clergyman and his young wife took up their residence in a small town some 20 miles from the city. Sometime later the first baby arrived. She was a fine, healthy child and was much admired. When the baby grew older, the parents went to the city to do their shopping, they were persuaded to leave the baby in the care of a couple of sisters, members of the congregation. These sisters were extremely fond of the child and claimed her presence in their home on every possible occasion. They were careful of her. One of the sisters was rather delicate and to her fell much of the care of the little visitor; sometimes the baby slept with
