MADE HARDSHIPS EASY IN CANADIAN WILDS

Surveyors kept in fine trim by simple first-aid measure

A member of a survey party, sent out by the government of British Columbia to do subdivision work three hundred miles from civilization reports that the men were kept in fine trim throughout the trip by a simple first-aid measure.

"The chief brought along as a part of our first-aid supply a bottle of Sloan's Liniment," he writes. "And through weeks of exposure and hardship we found it our best help for sprains, bruises, stiff muscles and rheumatism."

Sloan's gives real relief because it doesn't just deaden the pain. It helps your body to throw off the cause. Just a little Sloan's patted on lightly—and a healing tide of fresh, new blood is sent right to the place that hurts. The aching and stiffness are helped right away. Get a bottle today. All druggists—35 cents.

INSIDIOUS EYE STRAIN We use this adjective advisedly. Sufferers from Eye Strain may have perfect vision and therefore do not suspect the presence of any eye defect. The motive power of the entire human organism is Nerve Energy. Normal eyes, it is computed utilize about 20% of this Nerve Energy, but when Eye Strain is present a much larger proportion is required. Hence defective eyes, through their consumption of an excessive amount of Nerve Energy may seriously affect the functioning of other organs of the body and produce ill health.

DAUGHTERS OF MIDAS

BY ANNE AUSTIN

He couldn't, huh? He laughed shortly, snatched up his suitcase, and ran downstairs. At the foot of them stood Mrs. Moore, the housekeeper. "There you are, Clay. I was just coming up to tell you I have a nice little supper set out for you in the breakfast room. Or would you like to have it with your father? We're all glad you're home again, Clay. Stay a while this time."

She was pretending that she did not see the suitcases. "I'm off again, Mrs. Moore. Thanks a lot, but I won't wait to eat now. You've been awfully good to me. And he put his hands on her shoulders and stooped over her to kiss her soft, fat cheek. "Well, and, I'm off. I'm taking a few things—just what clothes I'll be sure to need before I get on my feet, and some music that I know no one else would want. That all right, Dad?"

Old T. Q. rose from his chair, standing six feet two. He frowned down on his son, who was an inch and a half shorter. "Don't talk like a fool," T. Q. said gruffly. "How about monself, as you made yourself. And I mean it when I said I admire you more than any person in the world. And take care of yourself."

Twenty-one dollars and thirteen cents! Thirteen cents! What did people do with thirteen cents? Where had the extra three cents come from anyway? Change from paper boys, probably. But he usually let them keep the change—

It was odd, Clay Curtis thought, as he walked briskly through the bitter cold of the early January night, that he should be thinking about dollars and cents instead of about his father, and his father's heartache and loneliness, and his own future. Twenty-one dollars and thirteen cents! Why, that wouldn't keep him a day at a hotel, the kind of hotel he'd been used to. Was that why his father had grinned when he looked at the money? Thought he'd be sneaking home again in twenty-four hours, broke and willing to be a good boy and mind his Dad. Funny how that cold-hearted little gold-digger's words kept coming back to him. And how he'd loved her! Her good and pink and white beauty! Her perfect body, displayed like a white statue to all who had five dollars and a half to pay for a ticket to the nudist revue in New York. She'd never been real, he knew now, until that last half hour, when she'd mocked him, laughed at him, and kicked him out for a bald-headed butter-and-egg man. Well, he couldn't walk the streets all night. He hardly ey? Got anything left in the bank?" The boy flushed. "I'm afraid I'm overdrawn. I gave Claire a sapphire and diamond bracelet before I told her your decision, and she didn't offer to give it back. I wouldn't have taken it anyway, of course. But I've got a little loose change in my pocket, I think."

He thrust his hand into a pocket and drew out a silver bill clip and a handful of small coins. "About twenty-one dollars, I think. Enough to do me until I get a job of some kind. No, sir, I don't want any more," he protested earnestly, as his father's hand reached for a checkbook. "I tell you, sir, I'm disinheriting myself, and I've got to do the job up brown. As it is, I'm taking an unfair advantage of my new self by carting all these good clothes away with me. Ought to earn them too."

T. Q. thrust out a hand. "I guess it's goodby. As you say, you're disinheriting yourself. Well, son, you'd better stay disinherited until you're ready to work in the Curtis Store. You've shown me tonight that I've been wrong, letting you play around over Europe for the last four years, filling your foolish head up with music. When you're ready to come home and go to work and take your place in the world as the future owner of the Curtis Store, I'll be mighty glad to see you. But—until then—well, I guess we'd better not see each other. Goodby, son. Take care of yourself."

"Goodby, Dad. I want to say again that I'm kicking myself out because I want a chance to make know where he was; had not been paying much attention. But he had turned instinctively toward the poorer part of the town, the section where working people lived in small cottages. He must have walked fifteen or twenty blocks, he thought, as he looked about him. He was cold and tired. He was looking for a street sign when he became conscious of music. Violin music. He stopped, without realizing that he was doing so, leaned against a low picket fence and listened. It was odd that such music should come from there, showing along the edge of a cracked green shade. "That's real playing," he told himself incredulously, forgetting the cold and the future. "Who would have dreamed of hearing Chopin played by a genius on the violin in a funny little dump like this?"

He leaned forward, drinking in the pure, clear beauty of the notes, until the music was stopped suddenly, in the middle of a measure. He woke from the spell the violin had cast upon him, and stared at the window. Then he became aware of a white card-board letter in black, tacked upon the corner of the house nearest the little scrap of front porch. He could not read the lettering, but he had an instinctive knowledge of what it said. Lifting his suitcases, he pushed through the little gate, stopped at the steps and lightly a match to read the card. He had guessed correctly. The lettering was:

"Then he poured water into the basin, and began to wash the disciples' feet" (Jn. 13:5-7) "Love... beareth all things" (1. Cor. 13:7) See—Matthew 5:39, 44; Romans 12:17. MEDITATION: Contrast the two spirits—in Judas, selfishness unto treachery; in Jesus, love that loves still when treachery has done its worst. That triumphant love He promises me. "The brightest glory is not in the stars, but in the struggles of a conquering soul."

HYMN: Sum of my soul, Thou Saviour dear, It is not night if Thou be near; O may no earth-born cloud arise To hide Thee from Thy servant's eyes! Wells in the next chapter. My weary eyelids gently sleep. Be my last thought, how sweet to rest Forever on my Saviour's breast! Come near and bless us when we wake, Ere through the world our way we take, Till in the ocean of Thy love We lose ourselves in heaven above. —John Keble, 1820. PRAYER: Thanks for responsibilities. Pray for the merciful spirit; the hard-hearted; American homes. Collected—O God, who dwellest in the beauty of holiness, we praise Thee for the beauty of the earth, for loveliness embodied in noble men and for the revelation of Thyself in Jesus Christ the incarnation of Thy conquering love. We are covered with shame at the thought of Thy faithfulness for we have not been over true to Thee. Keep us from infidelity to Thy friendship. Save us from treachery of soul. From the choice of evil and from the enthronement of the lesser things deliver us. Awaken in us a living sense of Thy spirit. Give us hunger and thirst for righteousness. May our hearts burn with the presence of Christ in us. So would we enthrone Thee, trust Thee, love Thee, obey Thee; all by the grace of Christ. Amen.

Minari's Liniment for all pains. IMPORTANCE OF CLEAN MILK The production of clean milk is of paramount importance to the dairy industry. This is clearly shown in a new pamphlet entitled "Producing Clean Milk" written by the Dominion Agricultural Bacteriologist, A. Grant Lochhead, Ph.D. The author points out that the quality of our Canadian cheese, butter, condensed and powdered milk, ice-cream, and of milk and cream consumed in liquid state is dependent on the success of a clean milk producer in providing a clean article. No manufacturer, cheesemaker, butter maker or city dairyman can raise the quality of his product higher than the quality of the milk delivered to him. Milk is easily contaminated but by proper methods of handling it can be easily protected against contamination. These methods are described in the pamphlet which may be obtained from the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa. It shows that ninety-nine per cent of the contamination willing to take
