

"A Stylish Dress for 15 cts!"

It helps a lot when a woman is wise to home dyeing. Old, faded dresses made the new colors of the hour. Just as perfect as any professional dyer could do it—if only you'll use real dye.

It's easy to diamond dye dozens of things, and do wonderful tinting of underwear and all dainty pieces. Using true dye is the secret. You can diamond dye all your curtains and covers, scarfs and spreads; any material, and right over other colors. So easy, it's fun!

FREE: ask the druggist for the Diamond Dye Cyclopedic for suggestion and easy directions; actual piece-goods color samples, etc. Or the big illustrated book Color Craft free, write DIAMOND DYES, Dept. N3, Windsor, Ontario.

The Unwilling Adventurers

BY MILDRED BARBOUR

THE GALLANT ELOPER

On the morning of his recklessly planned elopement with Camilla Fielding, young Hartley walked down Fifth Avenue to breakfast at his club and picked up his letters, for the last time.

He hadn't slept well—in fact, it had been daylight before he had closed his aching eyelids. The realization that only a few brief hours separated him from the woman who had wrought such havoc with his heart, code, and clean, young life, was too compelling to warrant slumber.

And then, that thing which is called Conscience, had loomed beside his bed all through the dark, disturbed hours. Hartley had tried in vain to shut his mind against the insistent jabs of that invisible foe, but Conscience was there, getting in telling apperceptions the moment the young man's mental vigilance relaxed.

He saw himself a the World would see him by that time the following night—the seducer of another man's wife!

He burned and choked over the thought.

The World couldn't know, of course, that there was never in the history of men and women purer, cleaner thing than this romance of his and Camilla's. He repeated that to himself over and over again. How could outsiders guess that Camilla was the victim of a brutal husband? How could they know that young Hartley, infatuated as he was, revered her? Fully cognizant of the cost, he offered her his life, his youth, his wealth, his entire devotion to wear as a shining shield against the unhappiness of her present life and the hazard of the future. But the World couldn't suspect that. The World wouldn't want to. The World would merely characterize him according to its lights.

Conscience, even Common Sense, told him: "You're a fool!" But Hartley, for all his advantages, was a little different from every other man who is known to us. He was a woman clever enough to make him think he wants it.

A block above his club, he passed a lady of aristocratic position and bearing. She bowed to him graciously, made as if to stop to chat, but Hartley hurried on. He thought: "This time tomorrow she wouldn't bow to me, if the same opportunity could present itself."

During breakfast he opened his letters. There was one from his father which caused him to congratulate himself on his rare, good fortune, for, after reviling the climate of the Riviera, grumbling about the food, the servants, and the "infernal tourists," Hartley Senior went on to say:

"I've just had a letter from your Aunt Ada Cushing and her husband. It seems that Howard is in a bad way—the Cushings were always weak and I told Ada so when she would marry him. They've now decided to try the Riviera. If they turn up in New York to sail, they'll look you up, so be sure to do what you can to get them safely on a boat. Howard's a fool and Ada never had any too much sense—your services will be a help."

Young Hartley folded the letter and heaved a deep sigh of thankfulness that he was destined to get out of New York before the arrival of his relatives. He liked his father's sister and her husband and would have been glad, under other circumstances to help them, but there is such a thing as arriving at precisely the most unpsychological moment.

Shortly before eleven o'clock he left his club, hailed a taxi and ordered the chauffeur to drive him to the pier. His luggage had gone down early that morning. His valise remained in New York to close his bachelor apartment; he would get a new man abroad, one who would be ignorant of his master's affairs and status for a while at least.

Before the ship docked in Europe.

LETTER OF SYMPATHY

Tyne Valley, Nov. 17th, 1926.

Dear Mrs. MacNeill and family,

We feel that it is almost sacrilege to approach you at this time of your deep sorrow and sadness, with words of sympathy which at best seem so powerless to help, and which oftentimes only serve to probe the wound, so sensitive, and bleeding.

Your grief seems too sacred to be intruded upon and yet words only are at our disposal to convey to you and your bereaved family our deepest sympathy and regret for the irreparable loss you have sustained in the sudden death of your beloved husband and father.

We can truly say that the feelings of every member of this society and of the community at large, have been deeply stirred by the sad and unexpected event, and we feel that we too, have sustained a great loss in the passing of a highly esteemed and upright citizen.

We miss him every day in his accustomed place of business. His genial countenance and happy courteous manner to one and all, will be long remembered.

We cannot understand why these crushing sorrows are sent, but somewhere beyond the gloom of this dark cloud the Silver lining will be revealed and you shall emerge from beneath the load of grief, stronger and better for having suffered so deeply. A Wise and all, who is able to carry us through Guiding Father is over and above the deep waters of affliction, if we can but trust even where we cannot trace and there is the promise held out of a glad and happy reunion of loved ones. Where partings are no more—for we are assured that.

We shall know the loved who have gone before.

And joyfully sweet will the meeting be.

For somewhere we know on the Unseen Shore.

They are watching and waiting to welcome us over.

Signed on behalf of the officers and members of the Ladies Aid and Missionary Societies of the United Church, Tyne Valley.

Fannie I. Milligan Susan Phillips

COULD NOT DO HOUSEWORK

Woman Suffered until Relieved by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

St. Charles, Quebec.—"I was married three years and had no children. I was always troubled with pains in the abdomen and was not able to do my housework. After trying all other remedies suggested to me, I have at last found that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the best in the world for me. It has done me more good than anything else I ever tried. I am well now and able to do my housework and care for my family. I recommend it to my friends as I am sure they will be satisfied."—Mrs. J. D. ROBINSON, St. Charles, Que.

Nervous and Run-down Hamilton, Ont.—"I was nervous and run-down, and always had a tired feeling and no appetite. I jumped at every sound and was always low spirited. My worst symptom was depression and I was this way for several months. A friend advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I have taken it for three months and am very much better and can work around more. I feel like another woman."—Mrs. P. L. GUY, 98 Tuxedo Ave. No., Hamilton, Ont. G

IN MEMORIAM

A. M. McLEOD

Alexander M. McLeod, 66, for several years a granite polisher at Burrus Granite works here, died at his home, 422 Columbia street, Burlington, Mass., yesterday morning. He had been ill about nine months.

Mr. McLeod was a native of Prince Edward Island, Canada, and was born February 23, 1860. He came to the United States 47 years ago, and to Burlington 17 years ago, and was a member of the First Presbyterian church and was an elder in its official body. Mr. McLeod was also a member of Mount Walseton lodge I. O. O. F., of Quincy, Mass.

He is survived by his widow, two daughters, Mrs. Jane Koss, of Carmel, Ind., and Mrs. Grace Lund, of Freeport, Me., and one son, Norman, at home.

Funeral services will be conducted from the home tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock with Dr. Archibald Cardie in charge. Interment will be in Aspen Grove cemetery.

AFFECTATION.

I will not call Vanity and Affectation twins, because, more properly, Vanity is the mother, and Affectation is the darling Daughter. Vanity is the sin, and Affectation is the punishment. The first may be called the root of self-love, the other the fruit. Vanity is never at its full growth till it spreadeth into Affectation, and then it is complete.—Sir H. Salville.

THE TWENTY-THIRD PSALM

By E. J. Mitchell.

The Lord is my Shepherd, no want shall bedevil me; Mid evergreen pastures my soul He doth guide; Then when the shadows of night gather round me, Beside the still waters He rest doth provide.

My soul He restoreth, and me He still leadeth, In righteousness paths—to His name be the praise; And, 'e'en though I walk through His rod and His staff do me comfort always.

A table before me He spreads with abundance, In presence of those who oppress me most sore; With oil of His mercies my head He anointeth— So boundless His goodness my cup runneth o'er.

His goodness and mercy we surely shall follow The days of my pilgrimage here, all the way; Then in the mansions prepared for the ransomed, I'll dwell in His presence for ever and aye.
