Bootleggers In Quebec

QUEBEC, Feb. 10—"It is all very well to say the soldiers should not take liquor, I don't know where this thing is going to end," said Lt. Colonel Marriot, O. C. Canadian clearing service here tonight, commenting upon the trouble which his staff is having with returned men under the influence of liquor.

"The situation is becoming worse all the time," he stated, "and last night the C. P. R. refused to pull out the train as nearly half the party of three hundred and fifty men were fighting drunk and we had great difficulty in handling them later.

Three of the men were so badly drugged from the poisonous liquor they drank that they narrowly pulled through."

Colonel Marriot said that the whiskey runners brought the liquor down to the trains in cases and sold it to soldiers without any action being taken on the part of the city authorities.

This is the second time that Colonel Marriot has denounced the inactivity of the authorities, and he declares that the situation is much worse than before the Scott Act came into effect.

ONE OF NEIL'S DEALS
GOES THROUGH CHAPTER XIV.

"Hip-hip-hurrah!"

Neil it was whose voice had rung out in the cheer. I was waiting dinner for him, but had not heard him come in.

"What's it all about?" He had grabbed me around the waist and was whirling me about the room for all the world like a mad Dervish.

"It's over! The deal went through today. My, but your husband's some money-maker! Say you're proud of me, Bab! Say it quick or I'll go and find someone who will." Anxious as always for praise.

"Of course I am proud of you, you dear boy. I'm always proud of you. Come, you shall tell me all about it while we have dinner."

Neil was very gay all through dinner, yet he really told me nothing. Again and again he reiterated that the "deal had gone through" and more than once I had to tell him that I was proud of him.

"We'll go and look at those apartments I told you of, on Sunday, or would you rather have a house?" he asked.

"Oh, let us have the apartment. A house isn't half so pretty nor so easy to manage. But Neil, why not stay here until our year is up? We'll have to pay unless we find someone to take it."

"Stay here! Well, I guess not! We'll get out of this joint just about as fast as we can, then we'll show them a few things." ("Them" being his friends of course.)

He was so boyishly happy, I said no more. Yet I dreaded the thought of change. The apartment, while not large, was comfortable and was almost luxurious in its furnishings. With the two servants I had little real care, and we had been happy there—in our first home.

After Neil's first ebullition of joy had somewhat subsided, as we were sitting in the library, sipping our coffee, I tried again to question him.

"Never mind the details, Bab. The thing is done. You couldn't understand if I tried to tell you."

"Lorraine said today that if she married she would want to know all about her husband's business. It made me realize I knew absolutely nothing of yours."

She probably would have to take it out in wanting. Men aren't apt to tell their wives very much of their business. Women gossip too much, for one thing; and for another a man has to talk business all day, and he doesn't want to talk it all night as well.

I said no more about the business, but told him of the conversation I had heard at the Waldorf. I described the men, and asked if he knew them. He said he did not recognize them from my description, so I repeated what they had said. If it was some other Forbes, there was no reason why I shouldn't tell Neil. I watched him as I repeated the conversation I had overheard. I had forgotten no word of what they had said—it had made me too anxious. Just as I finished I looked up and was surprised and puzzled to see a wave of crimson rush across Neil's face. But at the same time he said carelessly:

"There are several families of Forbes in New York. But we are not related."

Once again I had been uneasy for no reason. I must stop imagining things. I decided.

The remainder of the evening we spent planning when we should move—always supposing we found an apartment that suited us—and what we should do about the disposal of the one we were when occupying.

"If you rent it furnished or unfurnished you may have the rent," he said.

"Oh, I'll surely rent it, but I hate to let anyone have our things."

"We shan't need or want them. Might as well let them stay here."

The very next day I found a tenant for the apartment who would take possession whenever we were ready to vacate. I had spoken to the superintendent, and he sent this man to me—a bachelor who would take it off our hands if we would leave the furniture.

ORGAN RECITAL AT MALPEQUE

Despite the heavy snow-fall on Thursday the 6th instant, Malpeque church was well filled with an expectant audience to hear the pipe organ recital under the direction of Mrs. James A. Campbell of Burlington. Considering the short time at their disposal for practice—only three nights—the choir as a whole conducted itself in a wonderfully creditable manner and it is safe to assume what henceforth any effort in that direction by Mrs. Campbell will receive the well merited appreciation of the "rinetown congregation. Very special reference should be made to the able assistance rendered by Mrs. Bentley of Kensington whose beautiful tenor voice is an acquisition to our programme. It would be unfair to specialize any of the participants in the solo or duet selections as every number was effectively carried out. The object of the recital called for a voluntary offering towards the wiping out of the organ fund debt and on Thursday night the response was so spontaneous and hearty that the means justified the end and the recital was a success.

Says It Is Sticky But Who Will Care

Cincinnati man tells how to shrivel up corns so they lift out.

Ouch! ? ! ? ! This kind of rough talk will be heard less here in town if people troubled with corns will follow the simple advice of this Cincinnati authority, who claims that a few drops of a drug called freezone when applied to a tender corn stops soreness at once, and soon the corn dries up and lifts right out without pain. A delightful surprise awaits all who try this.

He says freezone is a sticky substance which dries immediately and never inflames or even irritates the surrounding tissues or skin. A quarter of an ounce of freezone which will cost very little at any drug store, is said to be sufficient to remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet. Millions of American women will welcome this announcement since the inauguration of the high heels.
