Is Women's Freedom Responsible for Divorce? Dorothy Dix Considers Both Sides of Question

"Divorce to End Divorce" Based on the Wife's Economic Independence Stirs Fears That the Home May be in Danger - Actually it is Building Foundation for Better Homes, Says Dorothy Dix

A correspondent asks if I do not think that the financial independence of the modern woman is largely responsible for the increase in divorce.

Undoubtedly it is, and the best argument in favor of teaching every girl a trade whereby she can support herself is that it enables her to escape from a degrading marriage in case she is unfortunate enough to make one.

It is absurd to attribute the increase in divorce to the decadence of morals or the degeneracy of the times, or to suggest that the men and women of the present are not as good matrimonial material as they were in the past.

There are just as many good, kind, loving husbands and wives in the world now as there ever were, and there are the same amount of mean, selfish, hateful, tyrannical husbands and wives as there has always been.

The husband of today is just as grumpy and unreasonable and hard to get along with as husbands have been since the time of Adam, and every daughter of Eve still has all of her foremother's love of clothes and irritating little ways.

But in those good old days in which divorce was as scarce as hens' teeth, no matter how miserable a woman was in her marriage, no matter how cruelly her husband treated her, she had to stand it, because there was nothing else for her to do.

There was no place for her to go if she left her husband's home, no way for her to eat unless she sat at his table. The altar was an auction block on which a woman was sold into slavery to her husband.

Many a wife endured forty or fifty years of a marriage that was a hell on earth. Many a wife lived on with a husband who worked her to death, or one who reviled and abused her and kicked her about as if she had been a dog.

It was inevitable that when women achieved financial independence it was synonymous with marital independence.

The woman who could not support herself had to submit to any kind of treatment that her husband accorded her. The woman who can earn her own bread and butter and can take care of her own needs, and if she doesn't get it she can turn up her job and quit. A lot have quit. Too many, and too many for inadequate reasons.

Certainly those are right who contend that the independence of women is largely responsible for the increase in divorce, but they are wrong in thinking that it is going to wreck the home.

It is going to put a stronger foundation under the home and strengthen its walls. It will make women better contented with marriage, because it they treat?"

A great sobriety came into Samdad Chiamba's eyes. "It is said that many, many centuries ago, more than a hundred men and women were trapped in a valley in these mountains during an earthquake. Ancient records say that it was so terrible that the very mountains changed their shape, and falling, buried a thousand villages and a great city!

will be a career of their own choosing instead of a distasteful chore that was thrust upon them. They will be better wives, better mothers, better housekeepers because they will feel that they have to hold down their jobs by giving good performances instead of knowing that they can't be fired, no matter how lazy and incompetent they are.

Furthermore, the knowledge that the wife can put on her hat and leave even as can Miss Smith, the invaluable private secretary, or Miss Brown, the inspired buyer, if she is not spoken to courteously and handled with care, is going to work a great reformation in husbands. For it is an unlovely trait of human nature that all but the noblest of us treat people the way they make us treat them. If they are in our power, we tyrannize over them. If they are helpless, we ride roughshod over them. If they are dependent upon us, we look down upon and sneer them with contempt.

This goes even for wives. Many a man says things to his wife that he would not dream of saying to his stenographer, or the cook, or any employe who could give notice and leave. That was because the wife had to stick whether she liked it or not, because she had no other way to make a living, but when wife can always go back to her old job she will rate being treated like a lady by her husband.

So if the financial independence of women causes more divorces now it is going to diminish them for the future. It's divorce to end divorce, so to speak. DOROTHY DIX.
