Literature And Life

Robert Louis Stevenson says "there is no music like a little river. It plays the same tune (and that is the favorite) over and over again. It takes the mind out of doors and quiet a man down like saying his prayers." Henry Van Dyke declares that a river is the most human and companionable of all inanimate things; it can talk in various tones loud and low and of many subjects grave and gay." But a river has competitors for man's affection Byron loved the sea and wrote about it thus: "I have loved thee, Ocean! and my joy Of youthful sports was on thy breast to be as 'twere a child of thee. And laid my hand upon thy mane".
