Discuss Future of Newfoundland

By The Canadian Press
Newfoundland's place in the world of tomorrow is an absorbing subject for study. "Newfoundland," (Oxford University Press) is a series of authoritative economic, diplomatic and strategic studies written by five historians and economists and edited by Prof. MacKay of Dalhousie University, Halifax.

In the studies emphasis is laid on the important position held by Newfoundland in regard to world strategy and world communications. Divided into two parts, the book deals with the island's economy, its development in the past, and Great War as an important defence base, its historical background and the constitutional issues that have vexed the country.

In an introduction, "The Problem of Newfoundland," the editor discusses the theoretical possibility of union either with the United Kingdom, the United States or Canada. He regards union with Canada as the most practical of the three suggestions, but formidable obstacles would have to be faced.

The political future of Newfoundland is a question which only the people of Newfoundland can answer," Professor MacKay says. "In answering it they are likely to be swayed by other than statistical facts or anticipated economic advantages. An intense love of freedom characterizes Newfoundlanders. It is by no means certain that Newfoundland, given a revival of international trade, a sound and frugal system of government, and willingness of its people to accept somewhat lower standards of living than their neighbors, could not carry on indefinitely as a separate political community. There is always the chance also of the discovery of new resources, or the invention of new techniques which may make considerably more valuable resources presently exploited. Newfoundland's new importance in air transport may also bring advantage not foreseen in this study. It is also possible that the United Kingdom might be prepared to continue subsidies even if responsible government were restored."

Other contributors to "Newfoundland" are: S.A. Saunders, author of "Studies in the Economy of the Maritime Provinces," A.M. Fra-

Weekly Live Stock

SUMMARY
Steady to stronger cattle prices were paid at all Canadian markets this week. Increases were noted mostly in western Canada where advances of 25c to 75c were made in some instances. Calves and piglets all gained in the east and hogs gained 25c at Toronto.

Eastern Cattle Markets

Cattle offerings at Toronto were the heaviest so far this year but prices held steady on all grades. Some heavy steers sold up to $15 and an extreme $15.50, with butcher steers making $13 to $14.50 and $15. Firm to strong describes the Montreal market where top steers were $14.75 to $15 and good quality up to $14.50, with good cows $10 to $11 or better. Small buyers were taking all the cattle available in the Maritimes and price quotations are next to impossible to obtain.

Western Cattle Markets

Brisk trading was carried on throughout western cattle markets this week. Prices were 75c higher, with a general advance of 50c on all top grades. A new top was established on straight load for some 25 years or more. The better grades of slaughter steers sold generally at $13.50 to $14.50. Medium to good stockers were taken at this market at $10.50 to $11.50. Calgary was strong and had good to choice steers at $13 to $14.25 and an odd $14.50, while Edmonton paid $12.25 to $12.75 and $14 for ion steers. Prince Albert made from $12.50 to a high of $14.75; Moose Jaw up to around $13; Saskatoon $12 to $14 and an odd $14.50; and Regina an odd $13.

Exports to United States

Dairy cattle exports were 2,003 for the past week, compared with 1,003 in the same week last year. Exports since January 1st totalled 28,081 as against 20,113 in the same period a year ago.

Eastern Calf Prices Lower

A sharp drop was sustained in eastern calf markets. Toronto was down $1.00, closing at $15.50 to $16 for choice veals, while Montreal was on a similar basis. Atomic Bomb Makers at Their Secret, Dangerous Work

With public interest in the atomic bomb at a peak because of the forthcoming tests at Bikini Atoll, the government has drawn aside—slightly—the heavy curtain of secrecy that protects the greatest of all "secret weapons."

These first photos, taken in the fabulous Oak Ridge, Tenn., atomic bomb plant, graphically show the danger involved in handling radioactive material. Laboratories like the one pictured are called "hot," because they process material of extreme radioactivity.

Photo at right shows the start of an operation to produce "radioisotopes"—radioactive forms of ordinary elements produced by atomic bombardment. Working rapidly, with very long-handled tongs, Paul Schallert drops radioactive material through the roof of a special heavy concrete cubicle. Inside are chemical processing units which can be operated completely and safely from outside the concrete room.

At right, below, Dr. Ralph Overman (rear) uses safely long tongs to remove material newly radioactivated at the end of the neutron bombardment period while Mrs. Weber, right, measures the bombarded sample's radio-active strength to check on the safety of handling it. In front of her is safety wall of lead bricks, behind which operators can work in certain "semi-hot" processes. The sample came out of the concrete room on a lead-shielded carrier block, pulled out on a small truck.
