APRIL
A rush of bird-song, a patter of dew, a glow and a rainbow's warning, Sincerely sunshine and perfect blue.
An April day in the morning.

MERIT
To be loved, we should merit but little esteem; all superiority attracts awe and aversion —Helvetius.

Nothing is eternal but that which is done for God and other. That which is done for self dies. —Augustine.

BLOUSED ALL ROUND FOR SPRING STYLES
"Bloused and How" is a term that may be applied with truth to dresses that have the newest look. We refer to the wholehearted bloused treatments given to the bloused line more marked since it blows well over a wide, snug belt that definitely accents the waistline making it seem smaller. Bloused from the neck in print or in sheer to contrast with the skirt, it is a silhouette that is equally at home in day or dinner dresses. In shirtwaist dresses or fancy fashions, it may have a Russian or peasant suggestion but it's strictly 1938 and growing.

LAPEL ORNAMENTS WILL BE CHIC THIS SPRING

Here is a time-saver when stonking raisins. Put them in a basin of boiling water, and let them stay there for two minutes; you can then stone them easily and quickly.

FACE FOUNDATION
If you use a good foundation for your face powder, you probably will have a good complexion. A good foundation should be applied to the face with a brush. It should be applied to the face with a brush. It should be applied to the face with a brush.

FRESH FLASKS
Valium flasks are apt to get a musty smell. You can prevent this by washing the flask in water in which a little vinegar has been added. When you put the flask away leave it uncorked.

REVIVING VEGETABLES
Weary-looking vegetables need not be wasted. Give them a new lease of life by letting them soak in vinegar and water about an hour before using.

CLOTHES HORSES
Clothes horses of which the webbing hinges have become worn or broken can easily be renovated at home. Replace the old hinges with brass ones, which will not rust and will keep the horse firmly in position when opened.

GREASE STAINS
Grease stains on wood or floors can be removed easily if a little cold water is applied directly they are made. In this way no dark stain is left after the removal of the grease.

TEA STAINS
If tea should be spilled on the tablecloth cover the stain immediately with soft sugar. Every trace of the mark will disappear when the cloth is put into water.

Your little girl will look darling in this simple pinafore princess dress. It's so cunning the way it buttons from the neck to the hem down the back. VAN WYCK MASON'S The CASTLE ISLAND CASE With CANDID CAMERA CLUES by HENRY CLAY GIPSON

CHAPTER XXX
Allenby returned to Freebooter's stall in time for cocktails and sandwiches. Then, taking care to wait until everyone was present, he said casually, "By the bye, I was down at the beach at Treasure Cove this afternoon. What do you suppose happened?"

"Oh, don't be silly," snapped Kathleen. "We're not good at riddles just now." Ward suggested, "You fell in?"

"You've found a clue," Stanley Gibbons said.

"Yes, a most important one." At the same time he gave a lightning look about, but if the criminal or criminals were present they gave themselves away not at all.

"Not that," Terry James began, then hesitated, but concluded, "The thing that was used to kill Barbara?"

"Exactly. The police are very pleased. Boyd says that this belt will rate as Exhibit A among the evidence they've collected."

"What was the belt like?" Sir George demanded evenly. "What color was it?"

"It's a blue and white belt of plaited cotton cord—has a metal buckle on it. It's the sort of thing people wear with sports things or on bathing suits."

Clip the Camera Clues

"And where will you be, sir?" Constable Lunt demanded a bit un- easily. "Wouldn't it be easier to hide somewhere in the library and just pinch anybody who tries to get in?"

Decisively Allenby shook his iron gray head. "No, Constable, our quarry is too wary a bird. Now, please get this. While I turn in rather ostentatiously, you're to stay out here where you can be seen. Frequent noise and even if you hear a small noise inside, don't investigate! Of course, if some one makes a real racket, don't let me or be open to suspicion. In any case take your time!"

As well he might, Constable Lunt looked unhappy. "You mean I'm supposed to let someone go in and do 'some evidence'?"

"It amounts to that, Constable, but it's all counterfeited except the belt."

Constable Lunt nodded and heaved a small sigh. "Very good, sir. When will you be down again?"

"As soon as you hear of me, Roger Allenby paused at the room door and gave out his present a "good night" ere he turned to the stairs.

By the time illuminated hands on Roger Allenby's wrist watch were indicating twenty and only by a savage spurring of the will power did it possible to keep his eyes lids apart. Perverse, he found himself in conversation in picturing Superintendent Tyson and Inspector Boyd equally sleepless down at the boat house. What of Constable Turner, who had detailed to relieve the faithful Lunt very shortly? He was stifling a yawn when a very light footstep in the hallway warned a gent's rap on his door. He tried it open in a flash and to his great surprise beheld Lunt. He had never imagined so softly an individual could walk so lightly.

"I'm not sure, but I think someone's been in there," muttered the policeman. "Once half an hour ago I thought I heard a little noise and I investigated in that door which I bustled lock had been open—but I wasn't sure, so I was sure I heard a little noise, so I came for you."

"But you aren't positive?"

"Sorry, sir, I couldn't be. The win was making such a racket," Allenby bit the lining of his

"I wonder if I could see the belt?" Sir George suddenly suggested from his position beside Gall.

"Say, that's a good idea!" Young Gibbons started up. "Maybe one of us could identify it."

Health, Beauty and Independence Are All Valuable in a Woman, But Love and Serenity Are Her Best Assets When She Approaches the End of Life

What does a woman need to make her happy? If you could, what gifts would you ask her God to drop into your baby girl's cradle?

Mrs. Lorraine L. Blair, a well-known author of the Women's Financial Forum, which is trying to teach women how to use the money they inherit, has a formula for remaining happy. She says: "Between the ages of 1 and 14 a girl is entitled to good health and good looks. Between the ages of 15 and 25 she should have good looks between the ages of 26 and 30 she should have personality and charm. After 30 she must have cash."

This is a fine recipe, so far as it goes, for attaining earthly bliss, but it doesn't go far enough. It leaves out the most important things. Certain things are so important that parents who spoil their daughters are negligent and attractive in middle life, she should have enough money to live on. "Stanky" are all blessing that would smooth the pathway through life for any woman. But not all of these put together would make any woman happy. She lacked love, if she lacked a compelling interest in life, and she lacked a philosophy of life.

Some of the most miserable men and women are those who are beautiful, and many of the most miserable men and women are those who are beautiful, and many of the most miserable men and women are those who are beautiful.

From 14 to 20 I should give a girl a father and mother who had intelligent enough to understand adolescence and the good times that I could possibly give her all the pretty clothes and the good times that I could possibly give her all the pretty clothes and the good times that I could possibly give her all the pretty clothes.

And I would let her play around with the boys, but I would hold her safe in the middle of the road and not let her wander off into the primeval forest that look so alluring and are so dangerous. I would keep her from marrying until she was old enough and had judgment enough to pick out a husband that she would want to keep instead of return to the bargain counter within a year.

From 20 to 40 I would give her love and work that would keep her hands busy and would not have time to think about whether she was happy or not. I would fill her days with vital interests, with making her family happy and comfortable, with keeping up with her husband and helping him make his fortune, with making friends, with all the thousand activities that round out the modern woman's life and make it exciting and worth while.

And after 40 I should give the woman certainly enough money on which to be independent of her children, and to insure her being treated with courtesy and consideration by all with whom she came in contact, with courtesy and consideration by all with whom she came in contact, with courtesy and consideration by all with whom she came in contact.

I would make her like to hold them. I would make her let her children go about their own business of life with her blessing instead of her tears. And so, as she came to the end, she would be filled with peace and happiness as one who has packed upon a busy, useful day; whose best hour, after all, is the twilight.
