IN MEMORIAM

MASTER F. R. MURDOCK.

Mr. and Mrs. D. P. Murdock have the sincere sympathy of a large circle of friends in the death of their only son, Frank Russell, which took place Saturday night. After an illness of three weeks. The deceased was a bright little fellow and a great favorite with all who knew him. He was five years of age and is survived by six sisters, besides his bereaved parents.

MR. NEIL D. MUNN.

Passed peacefully away at his home on Friday, April 30, 1915, Mr. Neil D. Munn in the 76th year of his age. The funeral was held on Monday, May 3rd, Rev. Mr. Gillis conducting the service. Rev. Mr. Stewart, a former loved pastor also spoke very touchingly on the life and Christian character of the deceased. He had known him for many years, and could truly say he was possessed of rare qualities. He was a man of peace, kind and unobtrusive. He had great sorrows in life and passed through them all without a murmur following closely in the footsteps of his Master. Today he had come to pay the last tribute of respect to all that is moral of a worthy friend. The deceased was widely known and highly respected. He was a prosperous farmer, and a life long Conservative.

He was a son of the late Mr. Donald Munn, Presbyterian Elder. Of a family of four sons, three predeceased him, two in the prime of manhood. He leaves a disconsolate widow, one son and his wife on the home-stead, besides the following brothers and sisters—Dan in Southampton, Ontario; Mrs. P. R. Emery, and Mrs. Archibald Bell Wood Islands; Mrs. George Robertson, Fortune Bridge; and John A. in Boston, to mourn the passing of one whose place on earth can never be filled.

The remains of the late Mr. Munn were peacefully laid to rest beside his three sons in Little Sands Cemetery.

And when the sunset gates unbar, Shall we not see thee waiting, stand, And while against the evening star, The welcome of thy beckoning hand.

SALUTES AND SALUTATIONS

During the last few months we have grown so accustomed to seeing the military salute given and returned as scarcely to notice it. If we have thought about the matter it is probably to the effect that a walk through the streets must be rather fatiguing to those in uniforms. Yet the soldier's salute has many advantages over the less graceful and definite forms of greeting to use among civilians. The soldier has, or ought to have, no qualms on the subject; not only does he know whom to salute, but he is also taught exactly how to do it. At a stated time he is to raise the right hand with a circular movement to a stated spot, and after a stated interval he is to cut the hand smartly away.

The civilian has no such straight and simple path marked out for him, but must learn to greet his fellows as best he can. Some never achieve anything but a frozen glare of recognition; others compel themselves to "grin horribly a ghastly smile," but it is so mechanical a contrivance at to defeat its comparatively general purpose. Others again begin smiling at such long range that when they come to close quarters their nod has prematurely spent its force.

A really good nod is one of the richest gifts of Nature. It diffuses joy and comfort to a glow that, if we spy the happy possessor in the distance, we cross the road just for the pleasure of meeting him. But this is a rare case, and we are more likely to plunge recklessly into a cab in order to avoid an acquaintance. There are embarrassments enough in the matter of nodding without mentioning our horrid doubts as to whether or not we shall be recognized. Yet those doubts will cause men to pass each other with averted eyes, or with a jaunty unconsciousness that never deceived anybody from the beginning of time.

THE MUTUAL LIFE OF CANADA AND THE BLUE BOOK

The policy holders of the Mutual Life of Canada will be pleased to note that the report of the Dominion Government for the year 1914 shows that this Company continues to pay magnificent dividends both on the annual and quinquennial systems, the result being an army of satisfied policy holders who voluntarily advertise the merits of the Mutual of Canada.

One significant fact is that this Company still leads all others in amount of endowments in force in Canada. It has nearly $4,000,000 more insurance in force on this plan than any other Company, which speaks for the solid and substantial character of its constituents.

Another important fact is that the Mutual of Canada has the lowest ratio of lapses and not taken policies to the new issue of 1914 business. This speaks for the class of men insuring in the Mutual Life.

VON HINDENBURG'S RISE

Hindenburg had retired. His military career had not been a success. He had bored the war department with plans for defeating the Masurian Lakes. At manoeuvres he always had the enemy (and sometimes his own force) bogging in a morass. He could not sit in a cafe without using his beer for a practical experiment in physical geography, says T. P.'s Weekly.

The Government had even gone so far as to sanction the draining of that marshy region. No more could Von Hindenburg spend his holidays in experimenting with transport wagons. His occupation was gone.

So in desperation he went to the Kaiser with a request that he should retain this bulwark against Russia. That monarch agreed. And so it happened that the old warrior was recalled from retirement to command the forces that were to resist invasion and so save Berlin. In a special train and an old uniform he obeyed, and went to the front. Twice he appears to have succeeded in checking our allies' advance.

Therefore a certain curiosity as to his personality has arisen among his enemies. Rough, uncouth, bear-like, he appeals to the imagination.

Paul von Beneckendorff and von Hindenburg was born in 1847, and at the age of nineteen entered the third regiment of Foot Guards as a lieutenant. He commanded a company in the war against Austria. Distinction came to him early. For at the battle of Koniggratz, with but forty men to support him, he took a battery. Three guns were captured when he was stunned by a bullet on the head. But he rose up and led another charge, taking the remaining guns.

This brought him the Order of the Red Eagle with Crossed Swords, which as a rule is reserved for officers of high rank.

He entered the Franco-German war of 1870 as a captain, and was engaged in the attack on St. Privat, in which the Germans lost nearly half of their force. A fortnight later he was leading a charge at Sedan, after which he received the Iron Cross.

In 1872 he entered the Krieg Academy, where war in its most advanced stages is taught. Every year about a hundred and thirty pass the entrance examinations, a proportion of about twenty-five per cent. From these students the General Staff is selected. To get to this stage three years' study and two years' probation under the staff officer's requirements. Von Hindenburg passed all these stages, and between each promotion served a year with the colors, so that his thorough preparation in every art of war was assured.

In 1889 he reached the rank of lieutenant-colonel, which he went back to headquarters. After further promotion he took command of the Twenty-Eight Division, and three years later found himself at the head of the Fourth Army Corps.

Then at the age of sixty-four he was placed on the retired list.

Lately Von Hindenburg has been the idol of Germany. He has been suffering from gout, and a report spread about that he was afflicted with gallstones. Every "field post" has brought to him recipes and remedies, and the weight of feminine Prussia has been offering help.

But this solicitude was not the general rule in military circles. Not only was he looked upon as a crank, but he was too outspoken for a courtier.

Once at manoeuvres the Kaiser was leading one party, the Kaiser, by a dashy piece of cavalry strategy, cornered his rival. Afterwards he asked the defeated general's opinion. "It was very pretty, your majesty," was the answer, "but if this had been a real war we would have gone in behind your men and those who were not slaughtered would have been driven into the Baltic had they run so far."

This remark was not well received, for even in the present grim business of war the Kaiser has striven for the line of a gentleman.

Von Hindenburg is reported to be a man of keen, even bright humor and high spirits. He is reputed to be reckless of men, but his position has been so desperate that probably the heavy losses are no index to his character. He is a soldier, a soldier of human life. At the same time he has been reared in a hard school, and has spent much time in battle and a long life in military study based upon the hard principles of Von Moltke.

In appearance he is said to be "sturdy, rugged, square of jaw, with a sweeping nose and a beard. He is by no means the average popular soldier. Publicity he avoids, no doubt seeing in it dangers that have no compensating values. And with a man of the Hindenburg type, everything must contribute towards the practical end in view. Thus it is that we know nothing of his life except the outline of his military career.

It is significant that he should have been entrusted with the care of the Eastern frontier, for Silesia is the key to Germany's material strength.

NIOBE WAS READY FOR RAIDER.

One of the crew of the H. M. C. S. Niobe, in a letter to his mother in Halifax, writes interestingly of one of her trips early last month, in the course of which he says: "You wondered where I was the night of the big storm. Well, to be as close as possible, somewhere between Bermuda and Newport News doing the Bunny Hug and Turkey Trot; then starting all over again. We had quite a time of it. It was far the roughest we had this commission. The only time I saw it as rough was about three years and a half ago in the Bay of Fundy. "Everything was lashed down, and at times she would roll scuppers under, until we wondered if she was ever coming back. Then she would tango back with a dip on the opposite side. Every time she dipped, tons and tons of water would come over the forecastle. There was not the least bit of danger."

"When we arrived at Newport we went on guard, relieving the ships there. Five were doing duty there, but just for a day and a half, and when they steamed out they waived to the Cumberland and Niobe. Cheapeake Bay is about thirty miles across, so we had our work cut out to guard it, especially at night, when one can hardly see 30 feet. "Orders were that should the Prinz Eitel Friedrich come out, the Niobe should engage her, so we proceeded to clear anchor. That night everything was ready and everybody in high spirits. After cruising over 30,000 miles (which we have since the war broke out) and not meeting a German, it was indeed a long waited chance. We had supper, and then the bugles sounded us to action stations. My work over for a while, I went up to the upper deck. Here everything was pitch dark. The only light was from the phosphorus, and there was plenty of that, for we were ploughing along at full bore. However, they did not come out. Well, here is hoping that we meet them soon."

THE SCOTTISH POLICE

At a meeting of the Chief Constables of Scotland, held in Edinburgh the secretary reported that 770 members of the Scottish police had responded to the call of King and country, and were now serving in His Majesty's naval and military forces, being 203 from county forces and 567 from city and night forces. He said that many more would have volunteered, but in some places Chief Constables had been compelled, owing to local circumstances, to refuse sanction to men to leave the police service. At the same meeting a motion was carried by 19 votes to 11 in favor of the appointment of females as police constables, to carry out any duty which a Chief Constable considered them qualified for.
