EMOTION WILL GUIDE RELIGION

MADISON, Wis., May 15-(U.P.)-Religion remodeled along the lines of emotion, devoid of dogma, is predicted by Dr. Evander Bradley McGilvary, leading philosopher at the University of Wisconsin.

First, scientists must forget their magic and show the public how natural forces accounted for the phenomena that gave rise to dogma, McGilvary said today in an interview with the United Press. Their explanations, with convincing proof, would establish a religion of ideals rather than of mysteries.

But prove what they may, scientists will not eradicate religion, according to McGilvary.

Says Soviet Is Religious "I know of no stronger anti-religious organization than Soviet Russia, yet the Soviet are intensely religious. But their religion is made up purely of ideas," he said in illustration of his point.

McGilvary was born of Scottish missionaries preaching the gospel in jungle-ridden Siam in 1864. His early days were spent near Bangkok, the only outpost of a ferocious, untamed race.

Translated Gospels He learned the English language from his parents, and by the time he was 30 years old had translated Matthew, Luke, John, and the Acts of the Apostles into Siamese Lao dialect.

He received his first college degree at Davidson, N. C., college in 1884, and received later degrees from Princeton University and the University of California.

He taught at Cornell university and the University of California before assuming the University of Wisconsin philosophy department chair which he has held since 1905.
