"Flappers don't want to be angels because one can't get a slip on over wings."

Census Man: How old are you, madam? Lady: Tw. nty-five. Census Man (gallantly): You could easily say you were five years younger than you are. Lady: Oh, I've done that already.

"Your soldiers look fat and happy. You must have a war-chest." "Not exactly, but things are on a higher plane than they used to be. This revolution is being financed by a moving-picture concern."

She: Give me just one week to think it over. He: You'll have lots of time to think it over after we've married. She: So all the married women tell me.

Married Quarters

By DAVID LYALL

Continued

"Saturdays Rhoda's in the shop all day. Such business! It would make great-grandfather Bradford turn in his grave. I sometimes say to father a little less selling and more rest would be better for everybody. The war has doubled us, Jimmy, and that camp would swallow a whale."

"Dear me, mother! I must toddle up to it by and by!"

"Why not get Jane Cotman to take you up in her car? She'll be proud to do it!" she suggested, but when Jim did not lift his eyes from the summary of the war news in the Yorkshire Post, she went off quite happily to her morning duty. All the Markyate Saturdays shopped in the market on Saturday morning in the big square by the Town House, where from time to time immemorial the country folk had brought in their produce for sale.

It was still, as of old, an event in the week. Mrs. Bradford never missed it, rain or shine. She had a personal interest in the folk, most of whom were customers at Bradford's, some of them running accounts which she had to help by Saturday's purchase to balance. There was much friendly intercourse and kindly gossip on the rough cobblestones of the market-place, and no newspaper was necessary for the chronicling of small local events.

Directly his mother was gone, the semi-invalid got out of bed and began to dress himself, a somewhat tedious process to a man with one disabled arm and only partial use of his legs.

It took him the better part of an hour to make himself presentable. He had to get his own shaving water from the kitchen stove, and everything in the house that morning helped to accentuate the difference between his social status and that of the girl he had left behind him in green and pleasant Hampshire.

He proceeded downstairs fully equipped at last, and instead of going along the short passage to the front street, went through the garden to the gate in the lane. He wished to avoid the front shop, which he was aware would be crowded at that hour. Eleven o'clock rang from the town clock as he let himself into the lane, congratulating himself that he had escaped without attracting the notice of anyone except the lank creature known as Slatery's Ann, who had been sent out to the yard with an empty biscuit tin. He could easily picture the scene inside the shop, his father bland and smiling, rejoicing in the steady flow of business, handling the butter and bacon and cheese, adjusting the slicing machine, so that fatidious housewives might have the thickness of rasher they liked, the raw assistants doing their best in odd corners, and Rhoda, very quick, cool, and alert in her snow-white apron and sleeves, keeping a watchful eye on all.

Isaac Bradford had viewed with perfect equanimity the opening of several rival emporiums in Markyate. They were necessary for supplying the needs of the rapidly-growing population, and he did not grudge them their share, being quite well aware that the lion's share would remain in the old-fashioned shop the country folk had learned to trust.

The building of two mills in Markyate-at-Stone had brought people flocking to sure employment. Their little homes, of the kind described by Poppy, had crept up the steep slopes towards the moor in long serried rows, giving ocular demonstration of the town's growth.

The war had further increased its prosperity, for, though the mills were under Government control, and not allowed to branch out in any new direction they were working full time, and the great gunnery school attached to the camp, on the edge of Lannick Moor, brought shoals of customers of another sort to Markyate shops.

Life had broadened out in other directions. Amusement had to be provided for the great influx of new residents. A small theatre had been built, and two picture-houses, because the country folk coming in to buy and to sell demanded their share of the wild joy of civilisation.

A good many of the old residents, to whom the grey old-world flavour of Markyate had been precious, mourned these changes and developments and said that Markyate had lost its peculiar intimate charm.

As Jim Bradford moved slowly by way of Water Lane towards the upper end of the High Street he tried to visualise Poppy's impression of Mark-

He white blouse was too much open at the neck to suit Jim's fastidious taste, and the sun had reddened and tanned her sturdy chest, so that it was not beautiful to look at. Nearer, he saw the powder with which it had been plentifully deluged, the effect, merely being to make the skin a purplish hue.

"Somebody told Sylvia last night you'd come, but we didn't believe it. Poor old boy!"

Jane blinked her eyes violently, for the sight of her handsome cousin on crutches brought the war home. "I'm afraid you're feeling a bit rotten yet. Why didn't you let me come for you with the motor?"

"Oh, it isn't so bad as that Jane," he answered, smiling uneasily. "This is my last go with the crutches—I'm going to chuck them to-morrow—but I was feeling a bit stiff after the journey yesterday."

"I should just think so, poor dear! When are you coming to see us? I suppose you've heard we've moved up the hill?"

"Mother told me this morning."

"We like it ever so much, and wonder how we could have lived in Chapel Street so long. Won't you come to tea to-morrow? I'll fetch you in the motor at four o'clock."

Jim hesitated, longing to refuse, yet reflecting that it would only be postponing the inevitable, agreed to her invitation. "Where are you going now into the market? Let me take you. My, won't I love to show you off!" she cried with an admiring glance at the ribbons on his breast. (To be Continued)

Agony of Neuritis

A Story of Intense Suffering and Relief

"Do I recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills? "You may believe I do" says Mr. John H. Jamieson, of Wallaceburg, Ont.

"For five years I suffered day and night from neuritis. The agony was terrible. I lost control of my arm and shoulder and my hand became shriveled. Nothing helped me till I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Even then the improvement was slow and I took ten boxes before I was on the way to recovery. After that, though relief was rapid, my hand gradually filled out; the pain left me and I could sleep in peace. That was two years ago and I have not had a twinge of the trouble since."

Sufferers from neuritis, neuralgia or rheumatism should try the common-sense method of banishing these troubles by enriching the blood and strengthening the nerves with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These Pills are sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Severe Itching Burning Pimples on Head. Healed by Cuticura.

"My trouble began with an itching and burning of the skin. Later the back of my head and neck broke out in little watery, sore pimples. In a short time they became larger and festered and scaled over. The itching and burning were so severe that they caused me to lose my rest at night. I did not get any relief until I read an advertisement for Cuticura Soap and Ointment and sent for a free sample. After using it I purchased more and in about three weeks I was completely healed."
