JUNIOR RED CROSS
The Junior Red Cross Society of Colchester School held an enjoyable Valentine social on Friday, Feb. 13th. An interesting spelling match and history match was followed by the opening of a large box of Valentines by the post master William Compton and distributed by Miss Cleone McLean to every one present. The teacher, Fred W. Shaw and Mrs. Shaw presented each pupil with a dainty basket of candy, and Mrs. Catherine Compton and Mrs. F. Shaw served hot cocoa and cookies at the close of the meeting.

SILVER FOR ETHIOPIA

STOCKHOLM — (CP) — A magnificent set of church silver, consisting of 24 chalices and as many patens, or wafer dishes, have been executed for Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia by a firm of jewelers here. The pieces, made of gold and silver brought from Ethiopia, are to be donated to various churches in that country.

LONDON — (CP) — An eight-month-old pullet laid a cracked egg 3 1/2 inches long and 2 1/2 inches wide.

MUTUAL UNDERSTANDING

Mutual understanding will make for peace if not good will.—Old Mother Nature.

From the small round doorway of his new home in an apple tree in the Old Orchard Timmy the Flying Squirrel stared across to the bigger round doorway of a slightly bigger house in a neighboring tree. From that doorway Spooky the Owl stared back at Timmy. Mrs. Timmy pushed Timmy aside that she might look out.

"As I live it is Spooky," said Mrs. Timmy, staring as if she never had seen Spooky before.

"A nice neighborhood you've chosen for us to live in," complained Timmy who didn't approve of the Old Orchard as a place in which to live.

"How could I know that Spooky is living over here? I looked in that house when choosing this one. Spooky wasn't there then," retorted Mrs. Timmy.

Over in the other house Spooky the Screech Owl was talking to himself, for he was alone. "Two nice dinners," muttered he. "Yes, sir, two nice dinners if only I could catch them. There was a hungry look in his round yellow eyes as he stared over at that other house. It gave Mrs. Timmy an uncomfortable feeling. She guessed just what Spooky was saying to himself.

It was early evening. The Black Shadows were thickening the curtain of soft dusk which they already had spread over the land. It was the hour when Timmy and Mrs. Timmy loved to be out gliding from tree to tree just for fun. They believe that in every day it is wise to have a little play. It was the hour when Spooky wants to be out hunting for his dinner. Now neither the little Squirrels nor the little Owl left home. They just sat there in their respective doorways staring across at each other.

"It isn't safe for us to go out while he is watching us," said Timmy.

"We'll wait until he goes hunting before we go out. If he is hungry, and most hunting folks are these days, he won't wait very long for us because he knows we know where he is," said Mrs. Timmy.

Over in the other house Spooky was doing some thinking. "If they don't come out pretty soon I won't wait. I'll be just wasting my time," thought he. "Flying Squirrels are hard to catch at best even when they do know there is almost no chance at all. One of those Squirrels over there would be good eating, but so would a Mouse. It is much easier to catch a Mouse. If those Squirrel folk are going to live in that house I won't pay any attention to them for the present. When they get used to having me for a neighbor who doesn't bother them perhaps one of them will get careless. That will be my chance. After all I don't have to have a Squirrel dinner. No, sir, I don't have to. But one would taste good."

He snapped his bill, which perhaps was his way of smacking lips. A few minutes later he flew off in the dusk to hunt for a careless Mouse. Timmy saw him go. He made sure that Spooky had left the home neighborhood. Then he and Mrs. Timmy left to get their own dinner from one of their own storehouses over in the Green Forest and to find fun and exercise

They just sat there in their respective doorways, staring across at each other in climbing and gliding.

They returned home earlier than usual, hoping to get there before Spooky returned. They did. Then not being sleepy, they took turns watching from the doorway. So they knew when the little Owl returned. He went straight into his house and didn't even look over at their house.

"He got a dinner all right," decided Timmy. "He won't come out until he is hungry again. If we want to go again tonight we will be perfectly safe from him." He was right about that.

So, through mutual understanding, peace was kept between these unfriendly neighbors. Timmy and Mrs. Timmy going over to the Green Forest to play, and Spooky the Screech Owl doing his hunting outside the Old Orchard. Understanding will keep peace even though there be no friendship.

Contract Bridge

SMOOTHING HIS OWN PATH

Today's declarer needed plenty of luck to fulfill his three notrump contract, but at least he did what he could to smooth his own path.

West opened the spade seven, and East, who could mark declarer with K-Q small, simply encouraged a continuation by playing the eight. South won and, with no great enthusiasm, surveyed his resources. Certainly, there were a lot of key cards to be knocked out before the prospect of nine tricks would grow very bright.

After due thought, South carefully selected the club nine for a lead toward dummy. West unsuspectingly played low, and the nine was allowed to ride. When it held, South's chances had improved enormously. A low club was now led; the queen smothered West's jack, and the club ace dropped his king. After that, there was nothing to it. The heart queen was led from dummy and passed. West won and led another spade, but declarer could now count on two spade tricks, two hearts, one diamond and four clubs.

It is a small point, but observe that if declarer had first led the club ten, West unquestionably would have covered with the jack. The queen would, of course, win but later when declarer returned to his hand for another club lead, he would have a difficult guess whether to play the club nine in the hope of dropping the eight from the East hand, or a low club in the hopes that West was now down to the blank king.
