KEEPING TURKEYS

(Experimental Farms Note.) Turkey raising is not the difficult matter that many believe it to be, writes Mr. A. G. Taylor of the Poultry Division, Dominion Experimental Farms, who itemizes the essentials to success in this line of poultry keeping as follows: Well-drained soil; free range, well developed, healthy, unrelated breeding stock; and palatable foods properly and regularly fed. The birds are not confined to houses and for winter nights require only the shelter of a straw-barn or closed-in shed. Nor is the feeding an expensive matter. Turkeys, especially the Bronze which is our largest and most popular breed, are great foragers and gather much of their food from the fields. Altogether there is little labor required in keeping a flock; a small initial investment will provide a suitable start; and the market for dressed turkeys is good both at Thanksgiving and Christmas. A bulletin written by Mr. Taylor entitled "Turkeys—Their Care and Management" (No. 46, New Series) is now in the press. In it are to be found a discussion of breeds; practical directions for successfully managing a flock; and notes on the prevention and cure of disease. Copies will be sent free on application to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa. For First Aid—Minard's Liniment.

MORE HUMOURS OF HISTORY

A.D. 1139.—Matilda landed with a small force in Sussex, and occupied Arundel Castle. Stephen, who was of convivial habits, good-naturedly allowed her to join her half-brother, Robert, Earl of Gloucester, at Bristol. At the Battle of Lincoln, Stephen was stunned by a stone, taken prisoner, and lodged in Bristol Castle.

the charge to twenty-five dollars, one way." "Well, you'll keep on losing money as long as that old fossil drives your stage," asserted Percival, producing a bill. It was a new, one-hundred dollar bill drawn from a wallet containing a neat packet of similar bank-notes. It was intended to create astonishment and embarrassment. "You're taking chances," said Baker, shaking his head. "A check-book would be much safer, and I think I can always accommodate you." Baker stepped to the post-office window and had the bill changed. When Baker turned his back, Old Henry thrust his lean fist under Samuel Percival's nose. "For two pins and a button, I'd push your face down your throat!" and Old Henry's voice sounded somewhat like seltzer siphoned against a brick wall. "If I ever got a fair chance at you—" Old Henry lowered his arm as Baker returned with the change. The group outside the store had witnessed this little tentative passage-at-arms. "What's the matter with the hombre in the night-shirt?" called one of the group. Solano was not accustomed to linen dusters. Old Henry muttered and shook his head like a horse that has been stung on the nose by a bee. He pushed his way through the folk around the stage, climbed up and drove to the stable. "Somethin' queer goin' on," declared a bright citizen. And this sage remark fixed itself in the minds of those who heard it to be resurrected that afternoon and succeeding afternoons, when Percival, entrenched in a room in the Johnson boarding-house, refused to show himself on the street in the daytime, conducting his affairs by proxy in the person of Mrs. Johnson, who he paid lavishly to carry his notes and messages to Baker. And Baker, as overlord of Solano, found time to attend to the dispatching of telegrams by special courier to Antelope, putting himself and his organization at the service of the broker with the courtesy of the

WILD HORSES

By Henry Herbert Knibbs

STORY — TAKE ONE

"Flowers," declared Tecolote Pete to the card-man from Silver City, "don't care who they lay on." (From "Coroner Pike's Notebook.")

Solano, awaiting the arrival of the mail stage, viewed the removal of the dead outlaw to the back of Baker's store with various low-voiced comments, chiefly interested in the fact that the man was unknown in that section of the country. Samuel Percival's arrival created a livelier interest, especially after Old Henry Watkins, when questioned as to details, admitted that Percival had shot the bandit. Solano folk found it difficult to reconcile Percival's demeanor with the cold fact in the back of the store. The broker was so obviously ill at ease, nervous, all but hysterical under the calmly curious scrutiny of the people.

Baker, called from his office, questioned Percival in the doorway of the store. But the broker seemed to hear nothing that Baker said. The storekeeper's naturally pertinent questions seemed insulting to Percival, whose conventional mind demanded a more formal recognition of his presence and his immediate needs. He was hot, tired, dusty. His unsettled nerves called for their customary stimulant. His suitcase and bags had not been taken from the backboard by a funkier. No one came forward to show him to a hotel and flatter him with the obsequiousness he was accustomed to in Chicago. He felt that circumstances had discounted his importance. He raised his arms and shook his hands as though to silence his questioner.

"For God's sake, give me a drink, if there's any decent whiskey in this dump!" he blurted. "I'll pay for it." "Certainly, Mr. Percival," said Baker soothingly. "Just step back here to my office. You have had quite a shock. I feel upset myself."

"I'm not a bit nervous! Never felt better in my life. But I don't intend to stand here like a witness in a murder case with these hicks staring at me. I want a room and a bath and a decent meal. Worst food—"

"Which would you like first?" queried Baker mildly. "A drink. If you've got any good whiskey, trot it out. I'll pay for it."

"We sell almost everything but that," stated Baker. "And I make it a rule not to serve whiskey in public. If you'll step back here—"

Old Henry Watkins touched Percival's arm. "You've forgotten your baggage, Mr. Percy."

"Well, bring it in, can't you! Get a move on! Here!" And Percival fished a dollar from his pocket and thrust it at Old Henry. Henry took the coin and gazed at it curiously, then with huge disdain for both donation and donor, he tossed the dollar toward the group around the mail stage. A Mexican boy caught the piece of silver and scampered for home. Baker pushed past Old Henry and fetched Mr. Percival's baggage into the store.

Old Henry, still barring Percival's way, seemed to be waiting for something. Baker questioned the driver.

"I'm waitin' for my money for freight," Mr. Percy from Antelope to Solano—twenty dollars."

"Twenty what?" Percival's voice was high-pitched in affected astonishment and indignation. He was of the kind that always quarrels with hotel bills and service.

"Twenty—of the same as I thrum out in the street a minute ago," replied old Henry. "Regular charge."

"This is absolute robbery!" stormed Percival, turning to Baker. "Yes it is," said Baker. "The mail contract is robbing me every day. The stage doesn't pay expenses. I am thinking of raising

Secret of Keeping Young

Why is it that some women look older at thirty-five than others do at fifty? Why is it that so many women are always run-down, weak, pale, nervous, irritable and unhappy? Health, vitality and freedom from pain and disease alone can prevent the signs of age from fastening themselves upon women. All over this country women are awakening to the fact that the ills aches and pains of women may be relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and the result is renewed life, energy and the glow of health. In fact, the secret of keeping young is to ward off all internal ailments that cause premature old age, which is easily accomplished by this remarkable root and herb remedy.

"Lucky" with her baking

You know her—the most envied woman in the community. Her bread is always light and fine, her pastry is delicious—she never has a failure. It is not luck. She uses Quaker Flour. You, too, can be sure of success if you use Quaker Flour.

small-town potentate who take pride in being hospitable to visitors. And day after day the whisper ran about town: "Somethin' queer is goin' on."

Nothing was heard of Grace Percival. The identity of the person responsible for her disappearance remained unknown. Johnny Trent was in and out of town from day to day. It was rumored that the Chicago broker was sick; also that he was drinking heavily—and again, that he was afraid to be seen on the street for fear of meeting Old Henry Watkins who had threatened him. Others, deaf to these rumors, frowned sagely and declared that the broker would never show himself in public so long as Johnny Trent was in the vicinity. Neither Baker nor Mrs. Johnson had a word to say about the matter. Consequently the town mind hardened against them, jealous of their silence. Curiously enough, Johnny Trent became a sort of hero to the townsfolk. No one dared outright that Johnny had held up the stage and kidnapped Miss Percival—yet the glory was all his. Mr. Percival represented the unknown, outside world and all the naughtiness thereof, and the familiar condition and prospect, and the concrete romance of the West. And it has been said that East is East.

"It's guaranteed pure - and purity means value in soap -" says Mrs. Experience, to housewives interested in saving.

"Of course, you know right away that I refer to Sunlight—because Sunlight is the only laundry bar soap made in Canada that is guaranteed pure. A $5,000 Guarantee of Purity goes with every bar; and according to the makers, this Guarantee has never once been challenged during the whole lifetime of Sunlight Soap.

"It's perfectly obvious, too, that when every particle of a soap is pure cleansing material—and not loaded with useless adulterants and hardening materials—then that soap has more cleansing power and does more work with less labour. A little of it goes a long way. In short, it's really economical.

"That's why I always use and recommend Sunlight for the laundry, dishes and general housework. Sunlight keeps my hands soft and comfortable, too!" Lever Brothers Limited, Toronto, make it.
