BALLOON PUNCTURES QUIET

Contrary to popular belief the puncturing of a balloon tire on a rear wheel is not accompanied by any particular excitement. There are many instances where rear seat passengers in good cars have not known a rear tire was flat.

FIND THE NOISY BRAKE

What makes a motorist think all the drums are dirty when the application of the brake pedal is followed by a screech? One brake will make all the noise necessary to annoy the driver, and invariably only one brake is in need of cleaning.

GETTING INTO PRACTICE

The long trip can be made far more enjoyable if a little practice in long distance driving is had before starting on the trip. A few 100-mile jaunts during the two weeks prior to a long trip will put you in trim for 200-mile driving better than anything else.

DOESN'T ALWAYS WORK

The plan of turning the fan belt inside out, if it is slipping and you do not have the tools with which to make an adjustment, does not always solve the problem. In fact it may aggravate it. A flat belt often becomes concave after being in use for a time, this being due either to the shape of the pulleys or to the fact that the middle of the belt may stretch more than the edges.

THIS WILL TELL

If water is disappearing mysteriously from the radiator after the cylinder head has been removed and replaced the chances are that the gasket is cracked and the water is going into the cylinders. If this is the case there should be some oil in the radiator.

HUNTING PARKING SPACE

One of the handiest places to park a car is usually the one most often passed by. This is the space nearest the street intersection when you are just turning into the street on which you desire to stop.

YOU ARE SO BUSY WATCHING THE TRAFFIC

You are so busy watching the traffic as you turn and so interested in scanning the farther end of the street to see how parking conditions are that you completely overlook the space that is right at your radiator. Turn the corner slowly, keeping as near to the curb as possible. The chances are ten to one that you'll roll right into a parking space.

John Smith and His Car

By FREDERICK C. RUSSELL

John Smith is a character whom every motorist should welcome. He is not selfish, rather he is a motoring martyr, a chap willing and glad to have exploited in an interesting way, his experiences for the benefit of the other twenty million or more members of the motor clan.

No. 17.—The Right of Way

The next point of interest on our trip was a resort hotel on the outskirts of a small city. Smith thought his battery needed a testing and so after registering I rode back to the city with him in his car. The way in took us along a car line, and it was just our luck to have to keep stopping while a trolley took on and discharged passengers.

"If I thought there wasn't an ordinance against passing standing trolleys, I'd get ahead of this one," Smith said. "That's a thing I've been worried about ever since we started this trip. We've passed through various States and from the several automobile law manuals I have glanced over it seems that the laws vary considerably. There ought to be some uniformity about them."

"Undoubtedly it would be easier traveling if all motoring laws were similar," I replied, "but such uniformity is not possible nor desirable because conditions vary widely in different parts of the country. Besides, those who are engaged in framing new laws are seldom of the same opinion, and the consequence is that some States are already going out with new laws and abolishing obsolete ones. This makes for progress."

To make a little better progress ourselves at this point Smith turned into another street on which there were no car tracks, but at the next crossing he began to slow up because of an awkward traffic situation directly ahead. A car was coming down the street to our right; another was approaching from the left, while a third car was approaching from in front. Smith had been raised on the law that when two vehicles are approaching a crossing the car to the right has the right of way, provided both cars are approaching at approximately the same rate of speed. To all appearances the car to the right was traveling the same speed that we were; and on this assumption he slowed up to let the other car pass.

What Smith had not counted on, however, was that the driver to his right also had a car to his right, and so on in turn around the circle; consequently Smith found that the man to his left was waiting for us to come past.

A priest of God! What a wealth of meaning those words convey, but what can picture their profound import or tongue express their deep significance. Suffice it to say that you may now stand at the altar and there offer to God, the most holy, the most sublime sacrifice that a creature can offer to his Creator. Henceforth thou art dispenser of God's mercies; thou it is who dost welcome the new-born babe to the fold of Jesus Christ, thou art the exemplar and guide of his youthful years, the counsellor and friend of his maturer days, the solace and strength of his dying hours. You will become all things to all men in order that you may win all to Christ. The task will be a difficult one and at times hopeless but Jesus will be your reward exceeding great.

That we may share in that glorious reward we promise to offer our humble prayers on your behalf, beseeching God to pour His graces abundantly upon you and render your labors fruitful of countless souls.

As a tangible token of the love and esteem in which you are held by your friends of Grand River parish, we ask you to accept this small gift.

Fr. Gillis in a grateful and heartfelt reply thanked the people for their kindness and assured them that there would always be a warm place in his heart for the good people of his native parish. He then gave each of the congregation an individual blessing.
