

RED ROSE

COFFEE For particular people—
 "How good it smells"—for it is packed fresh roasted, and the doubly sealed can preserves its aroma and flavor.

NICHOLSON'S BRIGHT CUT SMOKING TOBACCO

MANUFACTURED FROM PURE VIRGINIA LEAF

When you once smoke this tobacco you will smoke nothing else. It is without doubt, the most delightful smoke yet put up. It has a delightful aroma, and nice and mild. Ask for it, and you will be convinced that it is the best 15-cent smoke you ever had. This tobacco is put up in nice paper packages.

HICKEY & NICHOLSON

TOBACCO COMPANY, LIMITED
Manufacturers Charlottetown

Your Account! Please

PAY IT

Accounts due are being mailed today. We request your prompt attention to same.

Beer & Weeks

WHEN YOUR WEDDING PRESENT COMES FROM US THEY KNOW "IT IS FINE"

We are showing some extra good values in Diamond Rings, Watches, Pearl Necklets, Jewelry, Silverware, etc., etc.

Come in and let us show you our goods. We are experts at Watch repairing and aim to give the most satisfactory results at reasonable prices. Give us a trial. We will convince you that the best place to have your Watch repaired is at

C. W. Patterson

JEWELLER
130 Great George Street

E. R. BROW

146 Richmond Street
Charlottetown

Fire, Life, Accident, Sickness and Plate Glass Insurance at Lowest rate. Agent at Summerside, Lloyd Lewis, Good Strong Stock Companies.

THE CENTRAL GUARDIAN

SHOP from Holman's Catalog.
BEST STRAW HATS under the sun. Prowse Bros., Ltd. 2330-4-41.
SPECIAL PRICES Friday and Saturday on Men's Boots at Purdie & Ferguson's. 2334-6-21.
ROBIN HOOD flour is guaranteed to please you better. 11667919-26-1mth.

DR. CARTER'S Cushion Sole Boots for men only $6.75 per pair at Purdie & Ferguson's. 2334-6-21.
BORDEN.—The Orpheus Eight (under direction of Prof. H. Ball) will give a good musical concert in Borden Hall on Saturday night of this week.
MEN'S GOLF OR SPORT shoes in smoked elk, with rubber or leather soles, only $5.55 per pair. at Purdie & Ferguson's. 2334-6-21.

BOY SCOUTS.—King's Own Troops will meet at 7.30 p.m. Friday, to discuss arrangements for camp. All intending to go must register names with consent of parents. (Sgd.) J. W. Johnston Scout Master. 2365-5-2.

JUST A REAL GOOD HOME at auction. W. T. Wellner property. 108 Prince St., 12 noon, Friday 6th 1923. A. Williamson, Auctioneer. 2333-6-11.

THE SCOTCHFORT MEMORIAL COMMITTEE meets in K. of C. Home 8 p. m. Thursday, July 5th to make final arrangements for reunion July 18th. Members are asked to meet without further notice. 2223-30-51.

GRANVILLE CIRCUIT.—Tuesday, 8th July, Pleasant Valley 1 p. a.m., Granville 3 p.m., Wheelie River 7.30 p.m. You are invited to worship with us. O. H. Peters Pastor.

RETURNED TO MONTREAL.—Mr. Daniel I. McLean, M.D., of McGill, who while in Charlottetown was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Peers, has returned to Montreal. After a short stay with his parents there, he will proceed to New York to resume his studies in a special list course. Dr. McLean is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Archibald McLean formerly of Charlottetown.

SPRINGFIELD SCHOOL.—The semi-annual examination was held at Commercial Cross, Friday June 30 at 7 p.m. about 30 visitors were present. The pupils were examined in the several subjects by their teacher Miss Morris J. MacLeod assisted by Miss Catherine MacDonald and answered most satisfactorily. Each scholar was presented with a suitable gift by their teacher. And the teacher was presented with a manicuring set and box of chocolates also an address was read by Mr. Lloyd Nicholson and presentation made by Miss Christine MacDonald. After which the visitors were treated to candy and peanuts by the teacher and ice cream and cake by the ladies of the district. A nice program consisting of recitations, songs, Harp and Violin music was rendered by the school pupils. Four of the pupils were awarded Public School Certificates. Annetta Munroe, Leslie Stewart, Lloyd Nicholson, Temple Llewellyn. The following is the address. Dear teacher, We, the pupils of Springfield school, having heard with regret that you are about to leave our midst to take your abode elsewhere and considering the long time you have been with us we cannot let the opportunity pass without giving expression to some token of regards. There is always sadness in the breaking up of old acquaintances and the severing of friendly ties. We realize that you have had many trials with us, and we appreciate your untiring efforts to improve our education and we have found you a most efficient teacher. In conclusion we ask you to accept this small gift, not because of its intrinsic value but as a small token of our regard and friendship. And we wish you a pleasant vacation. Signed on behalf of the pupils of Springfield School.

MILTON RIFLE CLUB Shoot Saturday, July 7. 2363-3-21.
CHILDREN'S WASH SUITS from $1.25 up. Prowse Bros., Ltd. 2330-4-41.
LADIES WHITE WASH skirts special $1.00.—Prowse Bros., Ltd. 31.
SPECIAL PRICES on all Spring millinery.—Prowse Bros., Ltd. 31.
MEN'S SPORT OXFORDS in black or brown, has Elk leather soles, special price $3.95 per pair at Purdie & Ferguson's. 2334-6-21.
LADIES SILK BLOOMERS all shades, special value $2.98.—Prowse Bros., Ltd. 31.
CAVENDISH, FAIRVIEW.—Rev. J. S. Millett will preach Sunday July 8, at Cavendish in the morning at 11 o'clock, and at Fairview in the evening at 7.30.

THE LADIES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, Montague will hold their annual ice-cream social in the church lawn Tuesday, July 10th. It unfavorable following evening. 2319-4-5-7.
A FEW LADIES Voile Dresse small sizes, special 89c.—Prowse Bros., Ltd. 31.
MEN! See our new Oxford shoes just received in black and mahogany calf. Purdie & Ferguson's. 2334-6-21.
MEN'S STRAW Boaters from $1.50 up. Prowse Bros., Ltd. 2330-4-41.

REMEMBER THE DATE of the tea party at Howe River July 21st the best of the season. 2342-5-2.
REMEMBER ZION CHURCH Sunday School picnic on Saturday July 7th by steamer Harland to Westville. 21.
LADIES CHAMBRAY BUNGALOW dresses, special $1.25.—Prowse Bros., Ltd. 31.
LADIES AND CHILDREN'S Bathing Suits 6 years to sizes 46 $1.35 to $4.75.—Prowse Bros., Ltd. 31.

MEN'S BOOTS in brown or black, Goodyear welted with rubber heels, special price $4.50 per pair at Purdie & Ferguson's. 2334-6-21.
THE COMMITTEE IN CHARGE of the Orange Tea at Kensington will gladly receive any contributions of foodstuffs from any other lodges or Societies. Address all boxes or parcels to Wm. Sharpe, Kensington. 2367-5-31.
HAMPTON CONGREGATION.—Rev. M. J. Macpherson, M.A., B.D. Minister. Preaching service for July 8, Tryon at 11, Hampton at 3.30. Sacrament of the Lord's Supper in the morning at Tryon. Preparatory service Saturday previous at 7.30. A cordial welcome to all.

CHURCH SERVICES.—Mount Stewart Methodist Mission. There will be preaching service on Sunday next, July 8, at Black River at 11 a.m. Sunday school at 10 a.m. Mount Stewart at 3 p.m. Marlborough at 7 p.m. On Tuesday, July 10th at Dunstaffnage at 8 p.m. Thomas Palethorpe, Pastor.
THERE WILL BE a concert in the Pownall Hall on Friday July 6th 8.30 p.m. given by entertainers from Charlottetown in the interest of the Canadian girls in training and the Trail Rangers. There will be a miscellaneous program. 2366-5-21.
ZION SUNDAY SCHOOL picnic to Westville Saturday, July 7th by Harland, leaving at 9 a.m. and 1 p.m. Scholars will meet at church at 8.30 to receive tickets. Lunch for visitors provided by Ladies Aid on grounds. 21.

Minards liniment for coughs & colds.

SAVE STEPS THIS SUMMER

Don't expose yourself to the sun in order to obtain small items from our store.

PHONE 33 and the goods will be delivered to your door in a remarkably short time.

There's no charge for delivery and the quality of all goods are guaranteed—so you may shop as conveniently and satisfactorily by phone as if you made selections personally.

GIVE US A CALL THERE'S A LIVE WIRE AT THIS END OF THE LINE

Johnson & Johnson
The Quality Drugstore
Cor. Kent and Prince Streets

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE
 (By Dominion News Service)
 LONDON, July 4.—The hand that rules a large part of the world tried to rock a cradle in Queen Mary's Hospital the other day, and the owner of the hand, His Majesty George V, was told by the nurse in charge that it wasn't done.
 "We impress on our patients that the cradles must not be rocked," said the nurse.
 And His Majesty laughingly remarked "Is it old-fashioned to rock cradles? Well I'm a bit old-fashioned myself."
 This was but one of several interesting incidents in the latest tour of Their Majesties through the east of England. One of the patients in this hospital, Edward Gillman, nearly 70 years old, who had seen much service, explained to the King that during the Great War he had lost a tunic in which were his medals. Duplicate medals were ready at a jeweller's but unfortunately he could not afford to buy them. His Majesty promised that the matter should be attended to as soon as possible.
 A woman patient called attention to the Queen to the fact that there was a pin in her cloak. The Queen smiled and said "I must have picked it up in coming through the wards." The patient removed the pin, and looked at the Queen and the matron in charge whispering a little sob in her voice: "I'll keep it for luck; it may bring me better luck next time."
 The unfortunate woman was thinking of the little baby that had died in her arms a few days before.
 From the Hospital Their Majesties proceeded to the Dock and Settlement in Canning Town. In the Boy's Club there boxing matches were in progress. One of the lads turned his head to glance at the Royal visitors. His Majesty called to him. You mustn't do that, keep your eyes on your opponent or you will probably be beaten."
 As Their Majesties left the settlement the small son of one of the officials stepped forward and presented the Queen with a bouquet of roses. As the Queen went to kiss him the lad murmured "I wanted to give you daisies from my garden, they're nicer, they've got roots on."
 So the Queen kissed him twice and agreed with him.

GLASGOW POLICE OFFICER NOT ANTIQUARIAN
 (By Dominion News Service)
 GLASGOW, July 4.—A certain police inspector has no ambition to become an antiquarian, since a silver cross 900 years old and valued at over a million dollars caused his arrest by the French authorities on the Italian border.
 This cross which is supposed to have been stolen from a Church in Italy was discovered exposed for sale in a pawn broker's shop in Glasgow in November 1920. In 1918 a similar cross disappeared from the Church at Aquila in Italy.
 Recently an Italian was extradited from London, it being alleged that he had stolen the crucifix. During the extradition proceedings the accused stated that he had recovered it from some ruins after an earthquake. The Glasgow police inspector was sent with the cross to Italy to identify it.
 On his return journey the French customs authorities discovered the cross, took it from him, and despite all his protests threw him in a clink. The Inspector's knowledge of English, and in clink the Inspector remained until complaints of the British Ambassador, much red tape and thorough investigations resulted in his release. The Inspector has renounced all interests in antiquities and is reported to have refused a glass of the national beverage on the grounds that it was more than 20 years old.

WASHING TIME
 (By Dominion News Service)
 LONDON, July 4.—The Police Court Magistrates of England have made a remarkable discovery. They have come to a realization that possibly the work of the

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE
 (By Dominion News Service)
 LONDON, July 4.—The hand that rules a large part of the world tried to rock a cradle in Queen Mary's Hospital the other day, and the owner of the hand, His Majesty George V, was told by the nurse in charge that it wasn't done.
 "We impress on our patients that the cradles must not be rocked," said the nurse.
 And His Majesty laughingly remarked "Is it old-fashioned to rock cradles? Well I'm a bit old-fashioned myself."
 This was but one of several interesting incidents in the latest tour of Their Majesties through the east of England. One of the patients in this hospital, Edward Gillman, nearly 70 years old, who had seen much service, explained to the King that during the Great War he had lost a tunic in which were his medals. Duplicate medals were ready at a jeweller's but unfortunately he could not afford to buy them. His Majesty promised that the matter should be attended to as soon as possible.
 A woman patient called attention to the Queen to the fact that there was a pin in her cloak. The Queen smiled and said "I must have picked it up in coming through the wards." The patient removed the pin, and looked at the Queen and the matron in charge whispering a little sob in her voice: "I'll keep it for luck; it may bring me better luck next time."
 The unfortunate woman was thinking of the little baby that had died in her arms a few days before.
 From the Hospital Their Majesties proceeded to the Dock and Settlement in Canning Town. In the Boy's Club there boxing matches were in progress. One of the lads turned his head to glance at the Royal visitors. His Majesty called to him. You mustn't do that, keep your eyes on your opponent or you will probably be beaten."
 As Their Majesties left the settlement the small son of one of the officials stepped forward and presented the Queen with a bouquet of roses. As the Queen went to kiss him the lad murmured "I wanted to give you daisies from my garden, they're nicer, they've got roots on."
 So the Queen kissed him twice and agreed with him.

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE
 (By Dominion News Service)
 LONDON, July 4.—The hand that rules a large part of the world tried to rock a cradle in Queen Mary's Hospital the other day, and the owner of the hand, His Majesty George V, was told by the nurse in charge that it wasn't done.
 "We impress on our patients that the cradles must not be rocked," said the nurse.
 And His Majesty laughingly remarked "Is it old-fashioned to rock cradles? Well I'm a bit old-fashioned myself."
 This was but one of several interesting incidents in the latest tour of Their Majesties through the east of England. One of the patients in this hospital, Edward Gillman, nearly 70 years old, who had seen much service, explained to the King that during the Great War he had lost a tunic in which were his medals. Duplicate medals were ready at a jeweller's but unfortunately he could not afford to buy them. His Majesty promised that the matter should be attended to as soon as possible.
 A woman patient called attention to the Queen to the fact that there was a pin in her cloak. The Queen smiled and said "I must have picked it up in coming through the wards." The patient removed the pin, and looked at the Queen and the matron in charge whispering a little sob in her voice: "I'll keep it for luck; it may bring me better luck next time."
 The unfortunate woman was thinking of the little baby that had died in her arms a few days before.
 From the Hospital Their Majesties proceeded to the Dock and Settlement in Canning Town. In the Boy's Club there boxing matches were in progress. One of the lads turned his head to glance at the Royal visitors. His Majesty called to him. You mustn't do that, keep your eyes on your opponent or you will probably be beaten."
 As Their Majesties left the settlement the small son of one of the officials stepped forward and presented the Queen with a bouquet of roses. As the Queen went to kiss him the lad murmured "I wanted to give you daisies from my garden, they're nicer, they've got roots on."
 So the Queen kissed him twice and agreed with him.

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE
 (By Dominion News Service)
 LONDON, July 4.—The hand that rules a large part of the world tried to rock a cradle in Queen Mary's Hospital the other day, and the owner of the hand, His Majesty George V, was told by the nurse in charge that it wasn't done.
 "We impress on our patients that the cradles must not be rocked," said the nurse.
 And His Majesty laughingly remarked "Is it old-fashioned to rock cradles? Well I'm a bit old-fashioned myself."
 This was but one of several interesting incidents in the latest tour of Their Majesties through the east of England. One of the patients in this hospital, Edward Gillman, nearly 70 years old, who had seen much service, explained to the King that during the Great War he had lost a tunic in which were his medals. Duplicate medals were ready at a jeweller's but unfortunately he could not afford to buy them. His Majesty promised that the matter should be attended to as soon as possible.
 A woman patient called attention to the Queen to the fact that there was a pin in her cloak. The Queen smiled and said "I must have picked it up in coming through the wards." The patient removed the pin, and looked at the Queen and the matron in charge whispering a little sob in her voice: "I'll keep it for luck; it may bring me better luck next time."
 The unfortunate woman was thinking of the little baby that had died in her arms a few days before.
 From the Hospital Their Majesties proceeded to the Dock and Settlement in Canning Town. In the Boy's Club there boxing matches were in progress. One of the lads turned his head to glance at the Royal visitors. His Majesty called to him. You mustn't do that, keep your eyes on your opponent or you will probably be beaten."
 As Their Majesties left the settlement the small son of one of the officials stepped forward and presented the Queen with a bouquet of roses. As the Queen went to kiss him the lad murmured "I wanted to give you daisies from my garden, they're nicer, they've got roots on."
 So the Queen kissed him twice and agreed with him.

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE
 (By Dominion News Service)
 LONDON, July 4.—The hand that rules a large part of the world tried to rock a cradle in Queen Mary's Hospital the other day, and the owner of the hand, His Majesty George V, was told by the nurse in charge that it wasn't done.
 "We impress on our patients that the cradles must not be rocked," said the nurse.
 And His Majesty laughingly remarked "Is it old-fashioned to rock cradles? Well I'm a bit old-fashioned myself."
 This was but one of several interesting incidents in the latest tour of Their Majesties through the east of England. One of the patients in this hospital, Edward Gillman, nearly 70 years old, who had seen much service, explained to the King that during the Great War he had lost a tunic in which were his medals. Duplicate medals were ready at a jeweller's but unfortunately he could not afford to buy them. His Majesty promised that the matter should be attended to as soon as possible.
 A woman patient called attention to the Queen to the fact that there was a pin in her cloak. The Queen smiled and said "I must have picked it up in coming through the wards." The patient removed the pin, and looked at the Queen and the matron in charge whispering a little sob in her voice: "I'll keep it for luck; it may bring me better luck next time."
 The unfortunate woman was thinking of the little baby that had died in her arms a few days before.
 From the Hospital Their Majesties proceeded to the Dock and Settlement in Canning Town. In the Boy's Club there boxing matches were in progress. One of the lads turned his head to glance at the Royal visitors. His Majesty called to him. You mustn't do that, keep your eyes on your opponent or you will probably be beaten."
 As Their Majesties left the settlement the small son of one of the officials stepped forward and presented the Queen with a bouquet of roses. As the Queen went to kiss him the lad murmured "I wanted to give you daisies from my garden, they're nicer, they've got roots on."
 So the Queen kissed him twice and agreed with him.

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE
 (By Dominion News Service)
 LONDON, July 4.—The hand that rules a large part of the world tried to rock a cradle in Queen Mary's Hospital the other day, and the owner of the hand, His Majesty George V, was told by the nurse in charge that it wasn't done.
 "We impress on our patients that the cradles must not be rocked," said the nurse.
 And His Majesty laughingly remarked "Is it old-fashioned to rock cradles? Well I'm a bit old-fashioned myself."
 This was but one of several interesting incidents in the latest tour of Their Majesties through the east of England. One of the patients in this hospital, Edward Gillman, nearly 70 years old, who had seen much service, explained to the King that during the Great War he had lost a tunic in which were his medals. Duplicate medals were ready at a jeweller's but unfortunately he could not afford to buy them. His Majesty promised that the matter should be attended to as soon as possible.
 A woman patient called attention to the Queen to the fact that there was a pin in her cloak. The Queen smiled and said "I must have picked it up in coming through the wards." The patient removed the pin, and looked at the Queen and the matron in charge whispering a little sob in her voice: "I'll keep it for luck; it may bring me better luck next time."
 The unfortunate woman was thinking of the little baby that had died in her arms a few days before.
 From the Hospital Their Majesties proceeded to the Dock and Settlement in Canning Town. In the Boy's Club there boxing matches were in progress. One of the lads turned his head to glance at the Royal visitors. His Majesty called to him. You mustn't do that, keep your eyes on your opponent or you will probably be beaten."
 As Their Majesties left the settlement the small son of one of the officials stepped forward and presented the Queen with a bouquet of roses. As the Queen went to kiss him the lad murmured "I wanted to give you daisies from my garden, they're nicer, they've got roots on."
 So the Queen kissed him twice and agreed with him.

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE
 (By Dominion News Service)
 LONDON, July 4.—The hand that rules a large part of the world tried to rock a cradle in Queen Mary's Hospital the other day, and the owner of the hand, His Majesty George V, was told by the nurse in charge that it wasn't done.
 "We impress on our patients that the cradles must not be rocked," said the nurse.
 And His Majesty laughingly remarked "Is it old-fashioned to rock cradles? Well I'm a bit old-fashioned myself."
 This was but one of several interesting incidents in the latest tour of Their Majesties through the east of England. One of the patients in this hospital, Edward Gillman, nearly 70 years old, who had seen much service, explained to the King that during the Great War he had lost a tunic in which were his medals. Duplicate medals were ready at a jeweller's but unfortunately he could not afford to buy them. His Majesty promised that the matter should be attended to as soon as possible.
 A woman patient called attention to the Queen to the fact that there was a pin in her cloak. The Queen smiled and said "I must have picked it up in coming through the wards." The patient removed the pin, and looked at the Queen and the matron in charge whispering a little sob in her voice: "I'll keep it for luck; it may bring me better luck next time."
 The unfortunate woman was thinking of the little baby that had died in her arms a few days before.
 From the Hospital Their Majesties proceeded to the Dock and Settlement in Canning Town. In the Boy's Club there boxing matches were in progress. One of the lads turned his head to glance at the Royal visitors. His Majesty called to him. You mustn't do that, keep your eyes on your opponent or you will probably be beaten."
 As Their Majesties left the settlement the small son of one of the officials stepped forward and presented the Queen with a bouquet of roses. As the Queen went to kiss him the lad murmured "I wanted to give you daisies from my garden, they're nicer, they've got roots on."
 So the Queen kissed him twice and agreed with him.

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE
 (By Dominion News Service)
 LONDON, July 4.—The hand that rules a large part of the world tried to rock a cradle in Queen Mary's Hospital the other day, and the owner of the hand, His Majesty George V, was told by the nurse in charge that it wasn't done.
 "We impress on our patients that the cradles must not be rocked," said the nurse.
 And His Majesty laughingly remarked "Is it old-fashioned to rock cradles? Well I'm a bit old-fashioned myself."
 This was but one of several interesting incidents in the latest tour of Their Majesties through the east of England. One of the patients in this hospital, Edward Gillman, nearly 70 years old, who had seen much service, explained to the King that during the Great War he had lost a tunic in which were his medals. Duplicate medals were ready at a jeweller's but unfortunately he could not afford to buy them. His Majesty promised that the matter should be attended to as soon as possible.
 A woman patient called attention to the Queen to the fact that there was a pin in her cloak. The Queen smiled and said "I must have picked it up in coming through the wards." The patient removed the pin, and looked at the Queen and the matron in charge whispering a little sob in her voice: "I'll keep it for luck; it may bring me better luck next time."
 The unfortunate woman was thinking of the little baby that had died in her arms a few days before.
 From the Hospital Their Majesties proceeded to the Dock and Settlement in Canning Town. In the Boy's Club there boxing matches were in progress. One of the lads turned his head to glance at the Royal visitors. His Majesty called to him. You mustn't do that, keep your eyes on your opponent or you will probably be beaten."
 As Their Majesties left the settlement the small son of one of the officials stepped forward and presented the Queen with a bouquet of roses. As the Queen went to kiss him the lad murmured "I wanted to give you daisies from my garden, they're nicer, they've got roots on."
 So the Queen kissed him twice and agreed with him.

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE
 (By Dominion News Service)
 LONDON, July 4.—The hand that rules a large part of the world tried to rock a cradle in Queen Mary's Hospital the other day, and the owner of the hand, His Majesty George V, was told by the nurse in charge that it wasn't done.
 "We impress on our patients that the cradles must not be rocked," said the nurse.
 And His Majesty laughingly remarked "Is it old-fashioned to rock cradles? Well I'm a bit old-fashioned myself."
 This was but one of several interesting incidents in the latest tour of Their Majesties through the east of England. One of the patients in this hospital, Edward Gillman, nearly 70 years old, who had seen much service, explained to the King that during the Great War he had lost a tunic in which were his medals. Duplicate medals were ready at a jeweller's but unfortunately he could not afford to buy them. His Majesty promised that the matter should be attended to as soon as possible.
 A woman patient called attention to the Queen to the fact that there was a pin in her cloak. The Queen smiled and said "I must have picked it up in coming through the wards." The patient removed the pin, and looked at the Queen and the matron in charge whispering a little sob in her voice: "I'll keep it for luck; it may bring me better luck next time."
 The unfortunate woman was thinking of the little baby that had died in her arms a few days before.
 From the Hospital Their Majesties proceeded to the Dock and Settlement in Canning Town. In the Boy's Club there boxing matches were in progress. One of the lads turned his head to glance at the Royal visitors. His Majesty called to him. You mustn't do that, keep your eyes on your opponent or you will probably be beaten."
 As Their Majesties left the settlement the small son of one of the officials stepped forward and presented the Queen with a bouquet of roses. As the Queen went to kiss him the lad murmured "I wanted to give you daisies from my garden, they're nicer, they've got roots on."
 So the Queen kissed him twice and agreed with him.

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE
 (By Dominion News Service)
 LONDON, July 4.—The hand that rules a large part of the world tried to rock a cradle in Queen Mary's Hospital the other day, and the owner of the hand, His Majesty George V, was told by the nurse in charge that it wasn't done.
 "We impress on our patients that the cradles must not be rocked," said the nurse.
 And His Majesty laughingly remarked "Is it old-fashioned to rock cradles? Well I'm a bit old-fashioned myself."
 This was but one of several interesting incidents in the latest tour of Their Majesties through the east of England. One of the patients in this hospital, Edward Gillman, nearly 70 years old, who had seen much service, explained to the King that during the Great War he had lost a tunic in which were his medals. Duplicate medals were ready at a jeweller's but unfortunately he could not afford to buy them. His Majesty promised that the matter should be attended to as soon as possible.
 A woman patient called attention to the Queen to the fact that there was a pin in her cloak. The Queen smiled and said "I must have picked it up in coming through the wards." The patient removed the pin, and looked at the Queen and the matron in charge whispering a little sob in her voice: "I'll keep it for luck; it may bring me better luck next time."
 The unfortunate woman was thinking of the little baby that had died in her arms a few days before.
 From the Hospital Their Majesties proceeded to the Dock and Settlement in Canning Town. In the Boy's Club there boxing matches were in progress. One of the lads turned his head to glance at the Royal visitors. His Majesty called to him. You mustn't do that, keep your eyes on your opponent or you will probably be beaten."
 As Their Majesties left the settlement the small son of one of the officials stepped forward and presented the Queen with a bouquet of roses. As the Queen went to kiss him the lad murmured "I wanted to give you daisies from my garden, they're nicer, they've got roots on."
 So the Queen kissed him twice and agreed with him.

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE
 (By Dominion News Service)
 LONDON, July 4.—The hand that rules a large part of the world tried to rock a cradle in Queen Mary's Hospital the other day, and the owner of the hand, His Majesty George V, was told by the nurse in charge that it wasn't done.
 "We impress on our patients that the cradles must not be rocked," said the nurse.
 And His Majesty laughingly remarked "Is it old-fashioned to rock cradles? Well I'm a bit old-fashioned myself."
 This was but one of several interesting incidents in the latest tour of Their Majesties through the east of England. One of the patients in this hospital, Edward Gillman, nearly 70 years old, who had seen much service, explained to the King that during the Great War he had lost a tunic in which were his medals. Duplicate medals were ready at a jeweller's but unfortunately he could not afford to buy them. His Majesty promised that the matter should be attended to as soon as possible.
 A woman patient called attention to the Queen to the fact that there was a pin in her cloak. The Queen smiled and said "I must have picked it up in coming through the wards." The patient removed the pin, and looked at the Queen and the matron in charge whispering a little sob in her voice: "I'll keep it for luck; it may bring me better luck next time."
 The unfortunate woman was thinking of the little baby that had died in her arms a few days before.
 From the Hospital Their Majesties proceeded to the Dock and Settlement in Canning Town. In the Boy's Club there boxing matches were in progress. One of the lads turned his head to glance at the Royal visitors. His Majesty called to him. You mustn't do that, keep your eyes on your opponent or you will probably be beaten."
 As Their Majesties left the settlement the small son of one of the officials stepped forward and presented the Queen with a bouquet of roses. As the Queen went to kiss him the lad murmured "I wanted to give you daisies from my garden, they're nicer, they've got roots on."
 So the Queen kissed him twice and agreed with him.

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE
 (By Dominion News Service)
 LONDON, July 4.—The hand that rules a large part of the world tried to rock a cradle in Queen Mary's Hospital the other day, and the owner of the hand, His Majesty George V, was told by the nurse in charge that it wasn't done.
 "We impress on our patients that the cradles must not be rocked," said the nurse.
 And His Majesty laughingly remarked "Is it old-fashioned to rock cradles? Well I'm a bit old-fashioned myself."
 This was but one of several interesting incidents in the latest tour of Their Majesties through the east of England. One of the patients in this hospital, Edward Gillman, nearly 70 years old, who had seen much service, explained to the King that during the Great War he had lost a tunic in which were his medals. Duplicate medals were ready at a jeweller's but unfortunately he could not afford to buy them. His Majesty promised that the matter should be attended to as soon as possible.
 A woman patient called attention to the Queen to the fact that there was a pin in her cloak. The Queen smiled and said "I must have picked it up in coming through the wards." The patient removed the pin, and looked at the Queen and the matron in charge whispering a little sob in her voice: "I'll keep it for luck; it may bring me better luck next time."
 The unfortunate woman was thinking of the little baby that had died in her arms a few days before.
 From the Hospital Their Majesties proceeded to the Dock and Settlement in Canning Town. In the Boy's Club there boxing matches were in progress. One of the lads turned his head to glance at the Royal visitors. His Majesty called to him. You mustn't do that, keep your eyes on your opponent or you will probably be beaten."
 As Their Majesties left the settlement the small son of one of the officials stepped forward and presented the Queen with a bouquet of roses. As the Queen went to kiss him the lad murmured "I wanted to give you daisies from my garden, they're nicer, they've got roots on."
 So the Queen kissed him twice and agreed with him.

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE
 (By Dominion News Service)
 LONDON, July 4.—The hand that rules a large part of the world tried to rock a cradle in Queen Mary's Hospital the other day, and the owner of the hand, His Majesty George V, was told by the nurse in charge that it wasn't done.
 "We impress on our patients that the cradles must not be rocked," said the nurse.
 And His Majesty laughingly remarked "Is it old-fashioned to rock cradles? Well I'm a bit old-fashioned myself."
 This was but one of several interesting incidents in the latest tour of Their Majesties through the east of England. One of the patients in this hospital, Edward Gillman, nearly 70 years old, who had seen much service, explained to the King that during the Great War he had lost a tunic in which were his medals. Duplicate medals were ready at a jeweller's but unfortunately he could not afford to buy them. His Majesty promised that the matter should be attended to as soon as possible.
 A woman patient called attention to the Queen to the fact that there was a pin in her cloak. The Queen smiled and said "I must have picked it up in coming through the wards." The patient removed the pin, and looked at the Queen and the matron in charge whispering a little sob in her voice: "I'll keep it for luck; it may bring me better luck next time."
 The unfortunate woman was thinking of the little baby that had died in her arms a few days before.
 From the Hospital Their Majesties proceeded to the Dock and Settlement in Canning Town. In the Boy's Club there boxing matches were in progress. One of the lads turned his head to glance at the Royal visitors. His Majesty called to him. You mustn't do that, keep your eyes on your opponent or you will probably be beaten."
 As Their Majesties left the settlement the small son of one of the officials stepped forward and presented the Queen with a bouquet of roses. As the Queen went to kiss him the lad murmured "I wanted to give you daisies from my garden, they're nicer, they've got roots on."
 So the Queen kissed him twice and agreed with him.

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE
 (By Dominion News Service)
 LONDON, July 4.—The hand that rules a large part of the world tried to rock a cradle in Queen Mary's Hospital the other day, and the owner of the hand, His Majesty George V, was told by the nurse in charge that it wasn't done.
 "We impress on our patients that the cradles must not be rocked," said the nurse.
 And His Majesty laughingly remarked "Is it old-fashioned to rock cradles? Well I'm a bit old-fashioned myself."
 This was but one of several interesting incidents in the latest tour of Their Majesties through the east of England. One of the patients in this hospital, Edward Gillman, nearly 70 years old, who had seen much service, explained to the King that during the Great War he had lost a tunic in which were his medals. Duplicate medals were ready at a jeweller's but unfortunately he could not afford to buy them. His Majesty promised that the matter should be attended to as soon as possible.
 A woman patient called attention to the Queen to the fact that there was a pin in her cloak. The Queen smiled and said "I must have picked it up in coming through the wards." The patient removed the pin, and looked at the Queen and the matron in charge whispering a little sob in her voice: "I'll keep it for luck; it may bring me better luck next time."
 The unfortunate woman was thinking of the little baby that had died in her arms a few days before.
 From the Hospital Their Majesties proceeded to the Dock and Settlement in Canning Town. In the Boy's Club there boxing matches were in progress. One of the lads turned his head to glance at the Royal visitors. His Majesty called to him. You mustn't do that, keep your eyes on your opponent or you will probably be beaten."
 As Their Majesties left the settlement the small son of one of the officials stepped forward and presented the Queen with a bouquet of roses. As the Queen went to kiss him the lad murmured "I wanted to give you daisies from my garden, they're nicer, they've got roots on."
 So the Queen kissed him twice and agreed with him.

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE
 (By Dominion News Service)
 LONDON, July 4.—The hand that rules a large part of the world tried to rock a cradle in Queen Mary's Hospital the other day, and the owner of the hand, His Majesty George V, was told by the nurse in charge that it wasn't done.
 "We impress on our patients that the cradles must not be rocked," said the nurse.
 And His Majesty laughingly remarked "Is it old-fashioned to rock cradles? Well I'm a bit old-fashioned myself."
 This was but one of several interesting incidents in the latest tour of Their Majesties through the east of England. One of the patients in this hospital, Edward Gillman, nearly 70 years old, who had seen much service, explained to the King that during the Great War he had lost