CANADIAN ROSES.

How a New and Profitable Canadian Industry Sprang Up.

It will surprise a good many Canadians, as well as Americans, to know that the finest roses sold in New York city are grown in Canada. It is only within a twelve month that this has been so, for even the florists themselves had no idea then that hitherto unnoticed Canada could grow the finest roses in the world.

But one of the New York fraternity, wandering about on his vacation in 1900, stumbled upon a place in Ontario that made him gasp. He saw at Brampton, ten acres of glass-covered houses, with a regiment of 150 men working about them.

He went in to investigate and found that an Englishman had been for ten years growing a lot of superb roses there—roses appreciated by the swiftness of Montreal, Toronto, and Quebec, who know from London and Paris what roses are.

His flowers grew in popularity from year to year, and he increased his plant proportionately, but he had never dreamed of sending roses to the United States, and was dazed when the New York man made him an offer for his entire year's crop.

His business sense came to the rescue, and he secured a higher figure, chuckling to think how the New York man would rave on finding out that Canada charges a twenty-five per cent. export duty on flowers. But the New York man did not rave a bit. He paid the duty cheerfully, as did his rivals, who immediately began prospecting Canada for like treasure trove, and they have made even more than their usual large profit on the blooms that have been sent here.

In a business way, the Canadian rose is superior in that it lasts so long. The average northern flower lasts a week, even in a hot drawing-room, while the blooms from local or Southern greenhouses rarely keep their beauty for more than three days.

The rose takes longer to grow in the Northern climate and the buds have necessarily more substance and take longer to develop. They are picked "close" there (that is, just on the verge of opening) and expressed to the States in long, flat wooden trays. The buds lie on their pillow of leaves and their long stems are covered with crushed ice. The water dissolving from the ice, moistens the stems sufficiently to bring the flower here in just its perfect stage of opened beauty.

The demand for the hardy products of Canada has already grown so great that 100,000 roses were expressed to New York alone in two months.

The Canadians cannot now begin to supply the new demand from the United States, and every grower is putting up additions to his establishment. The average new house is 840 feet long, just the size that can be looked after by one man.

More than one hundred houses of this size are being built now, and they are full of the latest improvements, steam boat, automatic boiler feeders, etc.

British Mines and Quarries.

A Blue-book just published contains statistics of the persons employed in mines and quarries in the United Kingdom, with statistics of output and accidents. In 1901 the total number of persons employed in and about all the mines of the United Kingdom was 839,178, of whom 806,735 worked at the 3,397 mines under the Coal Mines Act and 82,443 at the 731 mines under the Metalliferous Mines Act. At the quarries under the Quarries Act there were 94,188 persons employed, of whom 59,968 worked inside the actual pits or excavations and 84,220 outside. The total output of minerals at the mines under the Coal Mines Act was 231,343,224 tons, of which 219,037,240 were coal. Adding 9,705 tons from open quarries the total output of coal was 219,046,945 tons, which is lower than that of the previous year by 6,134,355 tons. At the mines under the Coal Mines Act there were 951 separate fatal accidents, causing 1,101 deaths. At the mines under the Metalliferous Mines Act there were 27 fatal accidents, which caused 30 deaths, and in quarries 97 fatal accidents, which resulted in 98 deaths.—London Times.

A Compulsory Holiday.

Mr. Kingston, the Australian Minister of Trade and Customs, has decided views on the subject of holidays, as on most other matters, says The London Chronicle. He thinks a holiday ought to be a holiday. Eight Hours' Day this year happened to fall at a time when the English mail steamer at Melbourne was replenishing her coal bunkers for the homeward voyage. The local representative of the P. & O. Company applied for permission to work, offering to pay double day and night rates for the privilege. Although the application was endorsed by the Wharf Laborers' Union, Mr. Kingston remained inexorable. He is of Irish parentage, and there is something suggestively Hibernian about a compulsory holiday.

Proving Death.

A means of distinguishing death from catalepsy has been devised by Dr. Icard of Marseilles, and submitted to the Academie des Sciences. He injects fluorescin, a strong coloring matter that is not poisonous, into the veins. A gram of fluorescin solution will color 45,000 liters of water. If there is any circulation, the body will turn grass green in two minutes, but the color passes away in a couple of hours without doing any harm.

All the Year Round.

There is no good reason why eggs should not be produced the whole year around and why broilers could not be sold as well in the fall as in the spring. Spread the business over a great deal of the year and make a demand for poultry products by supplying them in an inviting manner. This is one way the business can be carried on all the year round.—Michigan Farmer.
