Prices for eggs under the British contract have advanced 1-2 cents per dozen, effective with eggs purchased or contracted for by the Special Products Board on or after May 5, 1947.

The adjustments have been carried in by the Ministry of Food in order that egg production and supplies to Britain will not be curtailed as a result of recent advances in poultry feed costs.

The above announcement is of more than passing importance to P. E. I. as, since January this year, 45 cartons or 750,000 dozen eggs have been sold to the Special Products Board for export to Great Britain in shell or powder form.

The British Ministry of Food has stressed their expectation that the full amount of increase will be paid immediately to all producers for all eggs delivered to egg grading stations in P. E. I.

As of May 5th, at the latest, P. E. I. producers should receive 1-2 cents more per dozen than received the previous week.

Dame Fortune would immediately upon she would lift a hand to signal a motorist, and grant him a pleasant trip. As he had remarked to James, this was no day at all to saw, with the dampness and all, though lumber in great, neat logs came to the mill. The very act would only invite illness, no matter how insistent might appear the need. James, mine husband, was off too, without as much as a goodbye, to the field work up the other farm. On the way, though at the time I could not verify it since the recent thaw had left our "party line" useless, he was joined by Rob and Jamie, their farm lying snugly in the distance between. They followed a program after James' heart. "We trimmed bushes today, Ellen, where we intend to put up that fence—and we built all the cuttings as we went." The existing dampness was ideal for the latter, leaving no danger of a fire continuing in its wake. "A convenient season." When I chance to read or overhear these words I am invariably reminded of James' at the farm. There is of course another time, of which we at Alderlea occasionally are advised sadly. It is "the lag behind" or as James will put it more intriguingly "a day too late for the Fair" when the day of opportunity had been allowed to pass by. This I'm afraid could apply to the stage of my Spring cleaning. Jamie enjoyed the burning and was so James said quite as active and interested in the work at hand as were his elders, and acquired a fine appetite for his supper thereafter. Jock and his faithful trusty, the Nell-mare cleaned stables and sties to the field, a heavy and tedious undertaking even with our smallish herds and flocks.

The small daughter in the house across the lane is back to her usual good health tonight. But not before we had a reassuring visit from the Doctor this afternoon, who found his way to Alderlea along today's miserable roads and lane, in his jeep. "I wonder, Ellen," Great-grandfather to Jamie said to me on his latest visit, his car having become be-mired tightly in a spot too sheltered now by the woodland across the road, but delightful in Summer dress, "that any one comes to see you folks ever—this place is so hard to get to!" It turned out, fortunately, that our girl's condition was not caused as James had feared because of "something the child swallowed — a button or else—picked up in her creeping. They're so hard to watch at this age, Ellen." Neither was it from her teething troubles nor was it an uneasy prelude to the measles. Neither had she been desperately ill as her parents had suspected. Her reticence had been due entirely to nothing more nor less than a recent change of milk. If the Kelly cow with the missing and one crumpled horn should ever hear of this, she will be inclined to act a bit "snooty" towards the lately freshened, smaller dar' helper!

A change of residence neighbors to us at Alderlea have made in recent days slipping away from our almost daily keel to a community at some distance from us. These are the folks, the rear of whose farm, nestles so closely to ours, these folk come down along the fields "a-kayleying" nor again "go a piece" leisurely with James and me along the cloverly meadows on a July evening. "A penny for your thoughts" I say to James, alone with them in the comfort of his old armchair. "I was thinking Ellen" he tells me, and perhaps there is such a thing as mental telepathy "that nothing abides. That's it, nothing abides... unless perhaps it be in nice memories. Until tomorrow — Diary — Good-night."

IMPORTANT TRENDS

NEW YORK — Important details and trends to watch include the coat dress, wrapped to one side with shawl collar, width through the hipline but skirt tapered to a narrow hem; tunics and middies, especially the fitted middie effect in many dresses and suits; loose, bellies coats, full in the back and long; spiral and wrapped treatments.

NECKLINES IN NEWS

NEW YORK — Necklines make much news, with wide lines such as the bateau neck newest, and sloping shoulders changing the appearance of the top of the costume. (Many of these sloping shoulders are still slightly padded as are suit shoulders.) Sleeves are rounded, melon-shape, below the shoulder, giving a wide look at this point rather than through the shoulder. Collars are frequently upstanding, especially in jackets and the shawl collar often replaces the notched lapel.

RURAL FIXTURE Agricultural fairs have been an integral part of American country life for well over a century.

BUILT FOR TWO LONDON — (CP) — A United Kingdom firm has produced what is said to be the first low-wing two-seat tandem glider ever built. The design incorporates a dual control, a centre-wheel undercarriage, dive brakes and longitudinal trimming.
