Insidious Eye Strain

We use this adjective advisedly. Sufferers from Eye Strain may have perfect vision and therefore do not suspect the presence of any evil defect. The motive power of the entire human organism is Nerve Energy. Normal eyes, it is computed utilize about 20% of this Nerve Energy, but when Eye Strain is present, a much larger proportion is required. Hence defective eyes through their consumption of an excessive amount of Nerve Energy may seriously affect the functioning of other organs of the body and produce ill health.

The 7 DIALS MYSTERY

By Agatha Christie

Ronny Devereaux, who had the room next door to Gerald Wade's, was told off to report progress. At a quarter to 2 he crept around tapping at doors. The party, pajamaed and dressing-own, assembled with various scuffles and giggles and low whispers.

"His light went out about twenty minutes ago," reported Ronny in a hoarse whisper. "I thought he'd never put it out. I opened the door just now and peeped in, and he seems sound off. What about it?"

Once more the clocks were solemnly assembled. Then another difficulty arose.

"We can't all go barging in. Make no end of a row. One person's got to do it and the others can hand him the whatnots from the door."

Hot discussion then arose as to the proper person to be selected.

The three girls were rejected on the grounds that they would giggle. Bill Everleigh was rejected on the grounds of his height, weight and heavy tread, also for his general clumsiness, which latter clause he fiercely denied. Jimmy Theisger and Ronny Devereaux were considered possible, but in the end an overwhelming majority decided in favor of Rupert Bateman.

"Pongo's the lad," agreed Jimmy. "Anyway, he walks like a cat—always did. And then, if Gerry should wake up, Pongo will be able to think of some rotten silly thing to say to him. You know, something plausible that'll calm him down and not rouse his suspicions."

"Something subtle," suggested the girl Socks thoughtfully.

"Exactly," said Jimmy.

Pongo performed his job neatly and efficiently. Cautiously opening the bedroom door, he disappeared into the darkness inside bearing the two largest clocks. In a minute or two he reappeared on the threshold and two more were handed to him and then again twice more. Finally, he emerged. Every one held his breath and listened. The rhythmical breathing of Gerald Wade could still be heard, but drowned, smothered and buried beneath the triumphant, impassioned ticking of Mr. Murgatroyd's eight alarm clocks.

THE JOKE THAT FAILED

"Twelve o'clock," said Socks despairingly.

The joke—as a joke—had not gone off any too well. The alarm clocks, on the other hand, had performed their part. They had gone off—with a vigor and elan that could hardly have been surpassed and which had sent Ronny Devereaux leaping out of bed with a confused idea that the day of judgement had come. If such suggested Bill hopefully. "Well, if you ask me," said Socks, "I think he's just spoofing us. Of course they woke him up. But he's just going to do us down by pretending he doesn't hear anything."

Every one looked at Socks with respect and admiration. "It's an idea," said Bill. "He's subtle, that's what it is," said Socks. "You'll see, he'll be extra late for breakfast this morning—just to show us."

TWENTY PAST 12

And since the clock now pointed to some minutes past twelve the general opinion was that Socks' theory was correct one. Only Ronny Devereaux demurred.

"You forget. I was outside the door when the first one went off. Whatever old Gerry decided to do later: the first one must have surprised him. He'd have let out something about it. Where did you put it, Pongo?"

"On a little table close by his ear," said Mr. Bateman.

"That was thoughtful of you, Pongo," said Ronny. "Now, tell me."

"I'm afraid sir, the poor gentleman must have died in his sleep"

had been the effect in the room next door, what must it have been at close quarters? Ronny hurried out in the passage and applied his ear to the crack of the door.

He expected profanities—expected it confidently and with intelligent anticipation. But he heard nothing at all. That is to say, he heard nothing of what he expected. The clocks were ticking all right—ticking in a loud, arrogant exasperating manner. And presently another went off, ringing with crude, deafening note that would have aroused acute irritation in a deaf man.

There was no doubt about it; the clocks had performed their part faithfully. They did all and more than Mr. Murgatroyd had claimed for them. But apparently they had met their match in Gerald Wade.

The syndicate was inclined to be despondent about it.

"The lad isn't human," grumbled Jimmy Theisger.

"Probably thought he heard the telephone in the distance and rolled over and went to sleep again," suggested Helen (or probably Nancy).

"It seems to me very remarkable," said Rupert Bateman seriously. "I think he ought to see a doctor about it."

"Some disease of the eardrums,"

He turned to Bill. "If a wacking great bell started ringing within a few inches of your ear at half-past 6 in the morning, 'what would you say about it?'"

"Oh! Lord," said Bill. "I should say—"

"Of course, you would," said Ronny. "So should I. So would any one. What they call the natural man would emerge. Well, it didn't. So I say that Pongo is right—as usual—and that Gerry has got an obscure disease of the eardrums."

"It's now twenty past 12," said one of the other girls sadly.

"I say," said Jimmy slowly, "that's a bit beyond anything, isn't it? I mean a joke's a joke. But this is carrying it a bit far. It's a shade hard on the Cootes."

Bill stared at him.

Montreal To Vancouver

This caption, while familiar to us now, was not familiar in the days not so very remote. At the time of Confederation it was fraught with visions of vast barren wastes, wild Indians and a journey in the popular mind was something that was not contemplated by the average citizen. As well plunge into darkest Africa as make the journey across Canada in those days.

But times have changed. Today the traveller steps on board one of the fast luxuriously equipped transcontinental trains of the Canadian National Railways and is whirled away over steel rails as if were on a magic carpet, enjoying the comforts of civilization and the wonderful programmes that nightly come to him over the air, shortly to find himself in Vancouver.

The Continental Limited, carrying compartment - observation - library Buffet Car, leaves Montreal daily at 11.15 P. M., for Ottawa; Minaki; Winnipeg; Saskatoon; Wainwright; Edmonton; Jasper, in the heart of Jasper National Park, where is located the famous Jasper Park Lodge, owned and operated by the Canadian National Railways; Vancouver; Victoria, B. C. The passage from Vancouver to Victoria is made in one of the palatial Canadian National Steamships.

Those coming from Maritime Provinces points have the choice of several connections. By the "Ocean Limited" (daily) and carrying radio equipped compartment observation - library car, one can enjoy the day in Montreal or close connection can be made by the "Maritime Express" (daily except Sunday), arriving Montreal 7.50 P. M.

For illustrated booklets descriptive of Pacific Coast territory, including Alaska, and Jasper National Park, fares, reservations, etc., apply any Canadian National Ticket Agent or F. W. Robertson, General Passenger Agent, Moncton, N. B. 9305-10-3-17-24 Oct.
