Literature And Life

By BOOKMAN "KINDLY HARSHNESS"

The phrase is from an essay by Leigh Hunt—the one which Charles Lamb was so fond of. The subject is the death of little children. Hunt says that those who lose children when they are small are the only ones who have them always.

Sometimes some ago I was strolling in a cemetery in Nova Scotia and came upon the grave of a little boy who had been dead for twenty-five years, yet there was a bunch of lovely fresh flowers on it. To his mother he was still her little boy though his playmates had reached manhood. This was the origin of the phrase at the head of this little article.

There is a kindness in discipline. "There is an old saying, 'spare the rod and spoil the child.' The rod need not be taken literally, though sometimes that may be a good thing. There are children who are spoiled by 'mistaken kindness.' That is very different from 'kindly harshness.'"

This is illustrated by the ups and downs of life. A New Testament writer says that chastisement is not pleasant, but "afterwards" its good effects are seen. There is an "afterwards" in life. It seems so far off that we cannot see it, but it comes with its load of arrears on its back, and we suffer. Esau's bitter tears are an illustration. The young man who wakes up some day to find that he is a drunkard is shocked. He did not think that it could happen to him, but it did. Cause and effect are no respecter of persons.

The surgeon's knife is not a pleasant thing to anticipate, but if the trouble is removed the patient finds that it was "kindly harshness." If the pen with which I write this, the paper on which it is written, or the table which holds my typewriter, or the typewriter itself could speak, they would say that they suffered in being transformed from their natural state to serve the purposes of utility. But would it have been better if the metals had remained in the bowls of the earth, or the wood to have grown old and mossy to be blown down by some autumn gale? Would the violin which I can hear from my window rather have remained a tree? These all suffered on the road to higher states. On the paper a song is written which may last a very long time. The logs from which the pulp for paper is made had to be subjected to severe processes before this paper was here.

Dealer Service School Is Held By Massey-Harris

During the past three days the Massey-Harris Co. have been conducting a service school in the modern and up to date workshop of McEachern and Bowness for their dealers organizations throughout the Province. The modern trend of farming has brought about this line of specialized service.

The school was attended by the following: C. T. Moore, J. H. MacLeod, W. E. Barnall, Leo Reid, Wilbur Andrew, P. G. McEachern, B. Bowness, Geo. Sutherland, John Gamble, D. MacPhail, D. MacEachern, R. C. MacPhee, Ralph Beck, L. P. Rossiter, D. MacLeod. The Massey-Harris Company are trying to cope with the problem of mechanized farming by having schools to teach their dealers the care and maintenance of new styled power machines.

The school was officially opened on March 1st by the Branch Manager Mr. G. F. MacAllister of the Massey-Harris Co. who introduced to the dealers the new service manager Mr. T. MacAleese who had several years of experience with the Service Dept. at Toronto in servicing both old and new machines.

On March 2nd, the dealers were entertained with a most enjoyable banquet.

"Then, welcome each rebuff That turns earth's smoothness rough. Each sting that bids nor sit nor stand but go! Be our joys three-parts pain! Strive, and hold cheap the strain! Learn, nor account the pang! dare, never grudge the throe!"

Again: "As it was better, youth Should strive, through acts uncouth, Toward making, (than repose on aught, found made."

For him life was a discipline, but the discipline was "kindly harshness."

poses, and fees charged for grazing must be changed. The Lords have given second reading to the necessary legislation and soon it will be before the Commons.

Here, these handsome plans seem more difficult than they do in London. —Granny Hughes and more than 100 of her people live in forest glades where there have been gypsies as long as there has been a forest.

"My people have been here longer than the squires and I don't want to leave," said Granny.

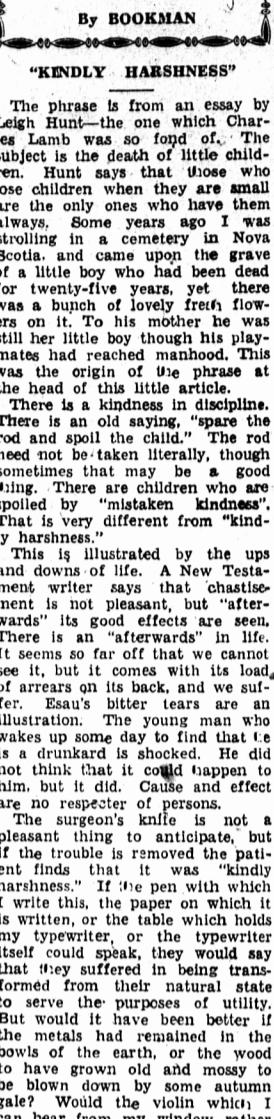

In the Lords, they had heard of the gypsies and a peer asked Lord Chancellor Jowitt what he proposed to do about them when the forest changes are made. Jowitt said it was "an awful problem... Unless and until we have found some method of housing these people and some place to send them to, it is very difficult to see what we can do."

"It is fair to say these gypsies have been in the forest for centuries and they have nowhere else to go."

Tucker Corporation Would Reorganize

CHICAGO, March 3 — (AP) — The Tucker Corporation today asked the Federal Court to appoint a trustee under the Federal Bankruptcy Act to act as a receiver in a proposed reorganization of the firm.

In a petition, the company said its total assets as of Dec. 31 were $14,434,380.68, compared with liabilities of $1,643,175.96.

But, it added, "the true value of the assets is not readily realized, and a forced sale of said assets might bring substantially less than its (the company's) total liabilities."

The corporation, founded more than two years ago by Preston Tucker, Chicago industrialist, was organized to manufacture a radically different, rear-engine automobile. So far, only 38 cars have been turned out — each handmade.

Nathaniel Ruvell, company counsel, told the court a multi-millionaire resident of Saint John, N. B., is considering a heavy investment in the corporation.

The prospective investor was named E. C. Irving. Ruvell said Irving is worth between $75,000,000 and $100,000,000.

"He is willing to give the funds," Ruvell said.

"If he feels this project warrants it, he has $10,000,000 to $20,000,000 that he is ready, willing and able to invest. But he needs time to investigate the corporation."

Ellen's Diary

(Continued from page 2) and drawing his chair nearer to the fire and in line with Mr. C's, goes on to mind many happenings in the past that occurred on just such a night as this.

But not the one I have in mind, now that this is the eve of Rob's birthday anniversary. — What a number of February's children, are the folks at Alderley! That was a mild night, that night before the Sabbath, when the week had come to its rest. But one recalls that it is more often on nights like this, storks ride into the storm-clouds, bearing their precious gifts.

This comes to mind too, the face and quiet content step of the kindly "old" doctor, whose name remains evergreen in the community. He had been the young doctor, the first time that James opened his eyes to this old house, and then had grown older along with the many, who had benefited by his skillful hands, his kindness and understanding, his innate calmness and strength of mind. He could, we were sure, keep death itself from entering a sick-room, and just to have his presence when a loved one was ill, was to know that all would be well.

Dorothy Dix Says —

(Continued from page 2) dren, to the altar. We wonder why he didn't take a first choice, instead of a second, or third, or fourth helping of the matrimonial dish. But as nobody ever knows why anyone marries the one he does, we class it up as another of the insoluble problems of life.

NO MYSTERY

Nor is it difficult to surmise why divorcees are so attractive to them. It is because they know how to handle them. They are experienced. They know all the tricks of the trade and how to play them, and before a man knows it he has signed on the dotted line of the marriage license.

Another reason why the divorcee gets her man is because she generally does the courting, which is a great relief to unsentimental middle-aged men. And still another trump card that the divorcee holds is that she is an experienced housekeeper who knows that the way to a forlorn and hungry widower's or bachelor's heart is by feeding the brute and making him comfortable.

Perhaps for these reasons the divorcee is regarded by men as a preferred matrimonial risk.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: I am a young man of 19 and for three years I have been trying terribly hard to become an actor, even if it means a small part on the stage, but with all my work and great talents I have failed. I have even lost the small job I had. So I have decided that suicide is the most practical and the kindest thing to do. Do you agree with me? BEN ANSWER: Suicide is a coward's way out of a difficult situation, and you should be ashamed to even think of being a quitter. Instead of a fighter, in the battle of life. At 19 you are still a child, nothing but a cry-baby who is sitting down and howling because the things he wants haven't been handed to him on a silver salver.

To begin with, you are trying to do something that is probably beyond your ability and that is, at any rate, something for which you are not fitted by either education or training. In this you follow the example of thousands of other stage-struck boys and girls who dream of being great actors and having the world at their feet. Fortunately, most of them have enough sanity left to realize that they are not Barrymores, Lunts or Fontaines and get a job by which they can make an honest living. They don't commit suicide.

My earnest advice to you is to make a man of yourself first. That is the way to find out whether you have talent or not. Give yourself the chance of being somebody.

DEAR MISS DIX: I like a certain young man, but I have never been introduced to him. My parents know him well. When we are in a crowd he just stands and watches me all the time. Why does he do this? I would like to be friendly with him, but how can I? MARGIE

ANSWER: Probably he would like to know you better, but is shy and doesn't know how to get acquainted. Get your mother to give a little party and ask him to it.
