HIS GREAT SCHEME.

"You don't have any doubt we're going to win this election, do you?" asked the man in the somewhat superannuated suit of black, who had called in at the headquarters of one of the great political parties and asked to see the manager.

"No sir," replied the manager. "We expect to win of course."

"Of course we are going to win," the caller rejoined, enthusiastically, "and I've got a little plan for doing up the other fellows and carrying the election in my ward at the same time—"

"I'm busy this morning perhaps some other day—"

"It won't take me two minutes to explain my scheme. It's against the law for anybody to vote at an election if he has a bet on the result, isn't it?"

"O, yes, I suppose it is. Still—"

"Good. It's against the law. Now, I purpose that some man—and I am willing to be the man myself—get as many bets as possible out of the other fellows. I can get a whole raft of bets by giving odds of 5 to 1, and when you are certain you're going to win what difference does it make what odds you give? My idea is to make about a hundred bets of that kind with men in my precinct. Then, on the day of the election, when those chaps step up to vote, I'll be on hand to challenge them. I lose my own vote, of course, but I knock out a hundred votes on the other side, and that'll give us the ward by more than fifty majority. I know how the votes run in that part of the city. When I—"

"But what have I got to do with any such scheme as that?" asked the manager.

"Simply this: I can do the headwork of this thing but I can't furnish the money. It will take $500. That's a small matter, when there's a campaign fund of hundreds of thousands of dollars to draw on. Besides that, it will be easy to make in a whole lot of good-sized bets on that ward and clean up a gallon of money on the side. You advance me the $500, and I—"

"But I am not going to advance you the $500."

"Do you see any flaw in the scheme, sir?"

"It's simply rot."

"But look at—"

"I haven't any more time to talk to you Good—"

"It doesn't go?"

"Nary go."

"All I would ask for compensation would be a little commission on—"

"Walker show this man out."

"You needn't do it, Walker. I can find my way out alone. Walker, thank you. Once more sir, do I understand that you absolutely refuse to join with me in this plan for beating the enemy, securing the triumph of right and making a pot of money on the side?"

"You blank idiot, of course I do?"

"Then sir," responded the man in the superannuated suit of black, stiffening himself, "you will bitterly regret it! I am going to present this idea to the managers of the other political party, and when you find yourself badly left in my ward you'll know who did it! Step aside, Walker, if you please."

Buttoning his threadbare coat about his attenuated form he strode out, leaving behind him a sort of alcoholic odor that lingered for some moments after the sound of his retreating footsteps had died away into silence.

WEBSTER & MCKAY. "Ideal Grocery." Cor. Kent & Great George Streets. Phone 190.

THE trip from Boston to Prince Edward's Island by the Plant Line is one of the pleasantest of the summer season. The writer recently enjoyed this unique trip, starting on Tuesday last at 12 and returning yesterday (Monday) morning at 7.30. The noble steamer Halifax bore the party of several hundred over summer seas without the slightest break or disarrangement, so that everybody going and coming was delighted. There could not avoid being some crowding on the return trip, so many excursionists were returning and La Grande Duchesse being temporarily off duty, but the courtesy of Captain Pye and First Officer Ellis and Purser Monbourquette and his able assistant, Arthur Gordon, were equal to the occasion, and the last hours were the merriest of all. The Lowell Mail newspaper excursion party of some 60 old was a feature of the trip, and it was evident that their wants were all carefully looked after by the manager, Mr. Thomas H. Durning of the Lowell Mail, who repeats this year on a large scale the success of last year.

In accordance with arrangements which were jokingly attributed to Mr. Durning, the passengers were provided with all the luxuries—great flocks of ducks and sea snipe flew for them; a grand square rigged three-master under full sail loomed up on her way to "Lunnon," an enormous school of mackerel rippled the sea for almost a quarter of a mile, and tempted a big school of porpoise to come tumbling after them, and great whales spouted and showed their black backs in full view. The weather was especially accommodating—smooth sea all the way, except for an hour or two in Northumberland strait, just to show what it could do; then a brief fog turn, and then clear sunshine and glassy water for the home coming. And we all say, "Hurrah for the Halifax and the Plant line!"
