LIBERAL ATTEMPT

was particularly careful with whom she made friends. He had seen his daughter during the holiday periods and saw no reason to change his opinion.

Regarding the letters, Mr. Lund said that he did not get the mail but that his wife had and that she had opened it. The larger envelope was not opened until Chief Hutchinson did so, and he did not see the policy it contained until it was shown to him by the chief. He said he had felt startled at the contents of the letter. He had never read anything quite so startling.

Miss Lund

Miss Luella Lund, in her evidence, said that she resided in Archibald street and had been boarding there for about a year. She was employed in the billing department at the T. Eaton Company here and had worked there for about six years. She was not married and her age was 23. She said that she had known Carl Steeves, the accused, for about five years, having met him at Eaton's, where he had worked on the same floor. Miss Lund said that she had been friendly with him for about four years, and that he had spoken of marriage almost ever since she had known him intimately. This was objected to by Mr. Bridges, but the objection was overruled by the court. The statement of the witness that she had received letters and notes from Steeves was also objected to by the counsel for the defence but it too was overruled.

The witness said that she knew Carl Steeves' handwriting and when shown the two letters and envelopes, said that the writing looked like his.

Regarding the night of May 9, Miss Lund said that she had seen Steeves go past the house where she boarded. The previous night he had told her he would be passing by and that she was watching for him. She had gone out and had walked up one side of the street and he the other, until they met in Highfield street extension, and had continued their walk together. They had talked about plans for their wedding on June 8, the witness said. She knew he was married. Miss Lund said, but Steeves had told her he was getting a divorce, and that his lawyer was J. F. H. Teed, in Saint John.

Plans For Wedding

Miss Lund said that she and Steeves had planned to go to her father's home to be married and that a visit to the accused man's brother around Boston had been planned as a honeymoon. Previously they had planned to rent a house following the marriage and when they came back from the honeymoon trip, they were going to take the accused's children with them. They had planned to keep a maid until school stopped and then they had intended sending the children to the country for a while. She said that Steeves had five children.

Steeves had been telling the witness he was going to get a divorce ever since she had been going out with him, and that she had believed him. She had never met his wife.

When she was walking with Steeves on the night of May 9, he had told her his wife was going to Havelock to visit her stepmother, Miss Lund testified, and that she was going on the 10 o'clock train. She had wanted him to be at home when his wife left, Miss Lund said, to assist her if necessary, and Steeves had left her and she thought he had gone home. She had walked down to Weldon street, and had met Steeves about 10 minutes after 10 o'clock. They had walked over to the back door of Steeves' house and had planned to go into the house to talk over more plans. These plans were all that they had been talking about lately, Miss Lund said.

She and Steeves had started to go in the house, with Steeves walking behind her, Miss Lund said, and Steeves had stubbed his toe. This was apparently heard by one of the children and a little girl had come to the door with a flashlight. Steeves had told the child he would be in shortly. They had stayed outside and were waiting for the children to quiet down, when something hit her on the head. Miss Lund said it was apparently a bottle, for the contents trickled down her neck.

When she was hit she had fallen, but did not lose consciousness, Miss Lund said. Steeves had picked her up and she had told him something hit her, but he made no answer. She had told him she felt faint. While standing there she heard one of the children say that her mother (the accused man's wife) was trying to get out of bed but that Steeves had told her the child was talking in her sleep, when she had asked him if his wife was away.

They had continued talking, Miss Lund said, when she was again struck over the head. This time she saw that the weapon was a piece of pipe when she looked up. The blow did not knock her down, but she did not see anyone holding it and the pipe then was lying nearby. Then she had tried to get away, and from there she had gone directly home.

Remanded Until Saturday

Steeves was remanded to jail until Saturday, when the hearing will be resumed with the prosecution producing additional witnesses. Over the objection of defence counsel, V. C. Bridges, Magistrate R. D. Milton accepted the letter as evidence. Signed with the name of Carl Steeves, it said the writer was "in love" with Mr. Lund's daughter, was going to "take the only way out," and was forwarding to Mr. Lund an insurance policy for $1,500, the proceeds to be used for the burial of Steeves and Miss Lund and "the rest," Steeves is married and has five

WILL PREVENT POLITICAL INTERFERENCE

Central Bank Shares To Be Privately Held, Committee Decides.

(C. P. by Guardian's Special Wire) OTTAWA, May 17—In the banking committee of the House of Commons today an amendment which would have made Canada's new central bank into a publicly-owned institution met with defeat by four votes. The bill establishing the bank provides that its 50,000 shares shall be privately held.

Conservative members of the committee present massed their full strength to defeat the amendment of Hon. Ian MacKenzie, Liberal member for Vancouver centre by 17 to 13. Liberal members and those of the U. F. A. group united in support.

The division followed a speech by Prime Minister R. B. Bennett, as Acting Finance Minister, in which he declared that he considered it of vital importance to the new venture that it should be privately owned. In so doing the Prime Minister emphasised most strongly the danger of political interference in appointment if the Bank of Canada was a government-owned institution.

What, asked the Prime Minister, were the considerations which any government was asked to place first and foremost in making appointments. "First," he said, "the question is asked, what are his political views? There were cries and protests if one of an opposite political faith to the government in power was selected as the most efficient man for a position. Then, the question arose of representation of both races; next came the point of religion; then whether or not occupation had been considered, if the labor or agricultural elements were represented. Thus it went on until the question of efficiency and capability were completely buried.

This was a danger of a publicly-owned institution, argued the Prime Minister—the danger of political interference in appointment. With the exceptions of Australia, Bulgaria, Finland, Latvia and Russia all the countries of the world which had central banks followed the principle set down in the bill, the Prime Minister stated. It was the sincere desire of the government to give to the people of Canada the most efficient instrument which could be obtained. He believed his honor that he would fulfill his duty if he yielded to arguments against the system laid down in the bill.

The Prime Minister stated something new when he informed the committee that it was proposed to consider reducing from 50 to 25 the number of shares which could be held by a single person. This step was contemplated in view of a desire to ensure that the shares would be widely held in the Dominion. He also defended the provision for taking over gold at par or official valuation by saying that every country in the world but Greece had done this.
