What the Fashionable are Wearing

Illustrated Dressmaking Lesson Furnished With Every Pattern

By Annabelle Worthington

YOUTHFUL SMARTNESS

Quite the smartest thing for practical daytime wear is this youthful jacket dress. It is fashioned of a thin woolen in monotone tweed mixture in vivid blue. A matching blue felt hat completes this jaunty outfit.

It chooses the cutest tuck-in blouse of white flat washable crepe silk. And to show it's thoroughly feminine, it uses pleated ruffling trim. And the jacket doesn't hide this pretty trim, because it is collarless. The skirt with a comfortably full flaring hemline is smoothly fitted through the hips with a yoke.

It is so entirely simple to make it! The saving in cost is enormous. The two-piece skirt is seamed at the sides and joined to the two-piece yoke. The blouse is in two sections. It is joined at the sides and the shoulders. It is cut from the neck and finished for closing. The little jacket merely has to be joined, the sides and the shoulders and the sleeves set into the armholes.

Style No. 2910 may be obtained in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20 years, 36 and 38 inches bust measure. For the 16-year size, 3 1/2 yards of 35-inch material and 2 1/2 yards of 54-inch material with 1 1/2 yards of 39-inch for the separate blouse is sufficient to copy it exactly.

It is just adorable too in a red and white printed crepe silk with plain white silk.

Light navy blue wool jersey or wool crepe is snappy with white embroidered eyelet linen, so fashionable at the moment.

Plain crepe silk with a lighter tone of the same shade used for the blouse is chic.

Wool challis prints, shantung, linen and many rayons also suitable. Be sure to fill in the size of the pattern. Send stamps or coin (coin preferred).

Price of pattern 15 cents.

WITH ALMA ARCHER

Carved rubies are becoming more popular than emeralds with many smart people, particularly the lighter Ceylon rubies. (Personally I never quibble.)

A watch measuring over one-half inch by three-eighths is hardly "in the know," although for golf, I suppose, we might slip on another eighth. The winder on these tiny fellows is underneath, in case you're one of those persons who always wants the facts. For evening, diamonds, carved sapphires and emeralds make a charming wrist strap, and for sportswear, I think the platinum cords nicest. Platinum incidentally, you know, costs little more than white gold now.

A shoulder pin of round and baguette diamonds releases a catch and fits right over one's orchids.

A nice bridesmaid gift is a vanity which looks like a cigaret case, of black onyx with the entire top of Oriental pearls and diamonds. (Moral,—don't have too many bridesmaids.)

Is a Girl's Best Friend Her Complexion?

Dorothy Dix

Thinks Beauty Too Fleeting

"While a Girl's Complexion May Be Her Best Friend as a Come-On, She Does Well to Remember That it is Only a Fair-Weather Friend Who Will Soon Desert Her, and Then She Will Need Her Brains"

An advertisement says: "A girl's best friend is her complexion." Possibly. Any way, it is her best approach, as a high-powered salesman would say. There is no arguing about the value of good looks to a woman. If she is pretty, she has the world presented to her on a silver salver. If she is beautiful, she can get away with murder, as innumerable pulchritudinous ladies have conclusively proved.

A willow figure, golden hair with a natural wave in it, and the sort of skin you love to touch will stand a girl in place of brains and character and amiability. Indeed, it is hardly too much to say that if a woman is easy on the eyes we will forgive her every other sin on the calendar.

Who is the petted child in every family, the spoiled darling who gets the prettiest clothes and the best of everything? Invariably the little golden-curl, blue-eyed cherub. What girls have the dates and could marry any one of a dozen men? The fine, intelligent young women who are fitted by Nature to be wives and mothers? Not at all. The beautiful but dumb.

Among the applicants for a job, which one would the astute business man pick out: the plain, homely, competent woman of 35, or a little flapper who looked like a Ziegfeld prospect? You guessed it the first time. Prettykins would get the job.

Who is the most cherished wife: Plain Maria, who spends her time slaving over the cookstove, or lovely Geraldine (who puts in her time at the beauty shop? You know.

No good-looker ever has to stand on a street car or open a car window for herself or pay her own way if there is any man about. Even in business the mantle of beauty covers a multitude of sins and a cutie with a classical profile and long curling lashes and a cupid's-bow mouth doesn't have to be as punctual and accurate and efficient as her plain-faced sister.

So it is no wonder that when girls see where beauty gets them in the way of husbands and jobs and general perquisites they conclude that their looks are the only thing that matter and devote all of their time and attention to trying to improve the outside of their heads instead of trying to cultivate what is inside of them. That is why most of them don't care whether they have one lobe or two to their brains, while they sit up nights studying the shape of their chin.

If girls put in as much serious thought on trying to improve their minds as they do on trying to improve their looks the world would be filled with feminine savants. And if they were willing to make the sacrifices of their pleasures, desires and inclinations for others that they make for the sake of their "figgers" we should have a race of lady angels.

But they don't. Their looks are all-important to them. They don't think that intelligence or disposition counts, and one can hardly blame them when one sees that in youth a girl's best friend is her complexion, as the advertisement says.

But the tragedy of this is that youth and beauty do not last. They may be a girl's best bet, but they are a woman's losing ticket, because the years inevitably rob her of these charms and then, if she has nothing besides these, she is sunk.

No woman is so forlorn and pitiful as she who has been a pretty, brainless butterfly in her youth and who in age is just a bedrabbled, faded, poor thing with all of her attractions gone. You could weep as you see her trying to buy a synthetic beauty for which there is no sale. Dyeing hair the color of youth, but unable to make a young face to go beneath it. Practicing the arts and coquetries that were fascinating at 20 but are ghastly as the rattling of the bones of a skeleton at 60.

Furthermore, while it is true that good looks are a first aid in helping a girl to catch a husband, it takes something more than beauty to hold him. It takes the qualities that come out of the head, not out of the cold-cream jar. For in time a man gets tired of looking even at a living picture that is nothing but an ornament. He wants to be entertained, to be amused, to be kept on his toes. He wants sympathy and understanding and companionship, and if his wife cannot give him these he wears of her, no matter if she is a perfect 38 nor how pretty she is.

So, while a girl's complexion may be her best friend as a come-on, she does well to remember that it is only a fair-weather friend who will soon desert her and then she will need her brains to fall back upon. They will stand by her and grow more and more helpful as the years go by and in the end give her an attraction greater than any she ever carried in her compact.

A Morning Smile

The argument started over a kitchen utensil which the neighbor had borrowed, and one word led to another. "After all, Mrs. Briggs," said Mrs. Mean, "you needn't get so uppish. I often pays you back more than I borrowed." "Yes, I can see that," retorted Mrs. Briggs. "This 'ere fryin' pan adn't got no 'ole in it when you borrowed it."

PARIS May 28.—(U. P.)—This is the day when we all have to mind our P's and Q's, cross our T's and dot our I's with punctilious care. And this translated into a fashion equation means that in planning the summer wardrobe we need to work toward P-olice and P-icturessences, and be sure there is Q-uality in our Q-aintness.

Goupy is a guiding star we may well follow through a series of triple color schemes. One that is especially new and characteristic of the P-Q motif employs pure white, tete de negre brown and cherry red. Here's how: The white is an exotic material, roughly woven of uneven threads, and forms a simple little one-piece frock with novelty sleeves. Wool jersey is in the brown that makes the jacket with just over the shoulder sleeves and a slightly crushed shawl collar. The red is for the narrow leather belt that has a pearl buckle. A knitted beret of red, brown and white is all that is needed after white gloves have been applied. Two little cherry buttons are placed on the white cuff of the dress, and brown pumps have an outline of white around the top.

Another Goupy color triplet color scheme is a cocoonat brown, white and yellow—country butter yellow. The skirt is of the dark brown and in a jersey weave. Dipping into it at the waist is a white triangle. The blouse is of brown near the waistline with triangles of yellow and white pointing upward to the neck and ending there in white. The jacket is all brown with yellow cuffs that make a triangle at the outer edge, pointing toward the elbow. The beret with this outfit is all brown with a yellow pin above the left eye in a little triangular peak. The shoes are brown in two tones, one matching the skirt and jacket and the other, strangely enough, the curly hair that strays out from under the small cap.

Agnes, in making one of her loveliest hats this season, has gone in for dog-wood blossoms made of satin ribbon with a shiny and a dull surface. They are applied onto a black close-fitting crown in two rows and are colored in twin sets—two pale pink, two off-whites, and two faint blues. This hat has been copied almost around the world even in this short length of time, and a picture of it is the feature of every fashion magazine regardless of the language in which it is printed.

How fresh and lovely is the wistful fragrance of the Yardley Lavender! Famous all over the world as the most exquisite example of this favourite English perfume, it is cherished alike by gay youth and by the older generation.
