What Every Widow Knows

CHAPTER 23

HUMBLE PIE FOR BREAKFAST

Probably Molly Benedict would have indulged in an entirely justifiable old-fashioned feminine "crying spell" on the night when Jimmie Gordon rescued her from the ill-fated Sans Souci club, had not the threatened tears been interrupted by a wild—and mildly funny—telephone message from the missing Clarence Collins. Molly had just taken off her coat after bidding Jimmie a tremulous good night when she heard the telephone in the tea room tinkling.

It was past one o'clock, and had it not been that she knew Sadie or Lilla would hear it, if she did not answer it, she would have heeded it not at all.

"This is Mrs. Benedict speaking—" she murmured in weary tones.

"Thank heavens!" Clarence's overdramatic reply came. "Oh, I've been nearly crazy trying to find you!"

"Yes! Molly's incredulity lifted her normally sweet voice.

"Yes, a thousand times, yes!" he assured her. "I know you must have thought that I deserted you but I didn't—I rushed out to find a taxi-cab to take you away, and then the man on the door would not let me go back in. I was nearly frantic."

"Yes!" Molly was very bitter. "Dear lady! Don't be angry with me! Don't misjudge me—I beat upon the door, I waited—"

"You couldn't have waited very long," Molly interrupted him. "It was nearly an hour before I was able to leave—"

"But the maid told me you had left directly—"

"I hadn't," Molly said drily. "I can never forgive myself," he had evidently settled down for a long chat. "I wouldn't for the world and all have had anything so unfortunate happen—I'm sincerely hope old Joe revived all right. He really ought not to drink so heavily—"

"He won't any more," Molly had a certain grim satisfaction in starting him. "He's dead."

Clarence's weak, "Not really?" was so absurdly inadequate that Molly had to smile.

"Good old scout, Joe was—" Clarence meandered on.

Molly's patience snapped. "I think I'll say good-bye—" she said curtly.

"But I wanted to try to make you realize how I feel—"

"You can't so don't try—" she hung up the receiver. She went back to her living quarters thoroughly disgusted with herself with Clarence—and the whole hateful situation into which his invitation and her own folly had landed her.

She bathed herself and late as it was she washed her brown hair as though in some way she might cleanse herself of the sordid evening. Sleep she could not, try as she might.

She found small comfort in reflecting that Jimmie still had enough respect for her to be willing to marry her. For super-sensitive little woman that she was, felt indescribably—"soiled" was the word that said itself to her—even from brief contact with so ugly a side of life.

Nor did morning bring her any curse from her nagging conscience. The newspaper headlines were positively lurid.

NOTORIOUS BOOKMAKER DIES MYSTERIOUSLY IN QUESTIONABLE "CLUB"

Her eyes eagerly scanned the sensational account of the death of Joe, the raising of the little club, the seizing of what the press socratically termed it "liquid assets" and the names and aliases of several men and women held as witnesses. But for Jimmie Gordon's timely intervention Molly Benedict's name would have been blazoned in that motley lot!

She crumpled the paper and hurried down to the tea room kitchen. She was wan and pallid, to face her garrulous cook, who was just putting Molly's simple breakfast on a tray. Molly herself carried it into the dining room, nibbling at a bit of toast and forcing herself to taste the coffee.

The cleaning woman, swashing the mop about the floor, mouthed the news.

"They was a nice looking young man with a little moustache around when I sawed him up this morning, and he said when you was up and I said regular as the clock you ate at seven to get an early start to market, and he says he'll back—"

Lack of a rear exit was Molly's one coherent thought. Another moment and Clarence was pushing his way through the door saying,

"I simply had to see you—just in the morning light he was far from the dapper figure that he cut in evening dress. Dark circles under his eyes, lean and hungry hollows in his cheeks, his suit, though neatly pressed, was shiny from long use and his shoes were half soled and shabby.

"So sorry—" Molly was curt. "I'm in a hurry—going out—"

He moved closer to her. The aroma of her steaming coffee made his nostrils quiver.

"Poor fool!" Molly thought compassionately as she looked up at him. "I believe he doesn't get enough to eat—" she relented a little aloud she added, "but cook will bring you some coffee—"

He accepted it gratefully, sitting down as near her as he dared, staring at her so contrite that in spite of herself Molly could not continue her severity.

Molly was on her feet now, her face flaming with anger.

Tinier even than the small Lilla she faced the impudent girl with forced courtesy.

"Mr. Collins just came in," she answered, "perhaps you'd like some coffee with him—I'm on my way to market—"

She walked steadily away from them, vainly trying to control her emotions.

White and shaking she reached the door, opened it and walked out into the vestibule and almost in Jimmie Gordon's arms.

"Jimmie!" she stammered, "What on earth are you doing up at—the crack of dawn?"

Jimmie looked down at her quizzically, dear old Jimmie, whose almost bald spot for once seemed to give him dignity!

"You know why I came my dear—" he said gently. "I didn't want you to run off—I was afraid you might—his hand caught hers, "ask me to breakfast—" he said.

Molly had a sudden vision of how he would look if he should see Clarence in a perfect panic she thrust her arm through his, saying,

"Oh things aren't ready yet—the woman is cleaning—I—I don't breakfast till I come back from market—just have coffee—"

And a little humble pie this morning he teased her gently.

She had him out on the sidewalk when she was sweet humbly in the brown eyes that she lifted to his.

"Molly—you little saint—" he began huskily. (To Be Continued.)

GOLDEN WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

On February 15th, despite the inclemency of the weather and the unfavorable condition of the roads a number of friends and neighbors assembled at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel D. Nicholson, Springton, to celebrate with them the anniversary of their golden wedding.

Mr. Angus MacDonald was appointed chairman, and stated in a brief speech the purpose of the gathering. He then called upon Mr. John D. MacDonald to read the following address.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel D. Nicholson Dear Friends—We, a few of your neighbors and friends have assembled together at this time, to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of your wedded life. Fifty years from the day you set up your home together it is inevitable that your family should be widely scattered, but when you look about you at the familiar faces of those who have gathered to commemorate your Golden Wedding, you will realize how great a place has friendship in the lives of all of us.

You will see too, with the eye of the spirit the greater circle of those who are prevented from being present but whose thoughts are with you at this time. We offer you our congratulations and warmest good wishes for many more years of happy wedded life. Please accept this purse and gifts as a small token of our behalf of your many friends, John D. MacDonald, Duncan Nicholson, Donald MacInnis, Angus MacDonald.

The gifts were presented by Mrs. John D. Nicholson and the purse by Mr. Donald MacInnis. Mr. Nicholson suitably replied to the address. Then all joined in singing "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows." After the usual felicitations a sumptuous repast was then partaken of to which all did ample justice. The remainder of the evening was pleasantly spent in music and games. Music was furnished by Miss Isabel MacDonald, Mr. and Mrs. Nicholson were the recipients of many beautiful and costly gifts from friends at home and abroad, also upwards of eighty dollars in cash. All present departed for their homes feeling that they had spent a most enjoyable evening.

Canadian macaroni and vermicelli last year made an entrance into Holland for the first time.

The importation of Canadian flour into Holland is hindered by restrictions, the Dutch baker being allowed to use only five per cent of foreign flour mixed with 95 per cent of the home-milled product. However, there was considerable increase in the imports of Canadian wheat last year.

"Toe Itch" Develops Into Ringworm

Is Caused by Dangerous Germ

The first symptom is moisture and whiteness on the skin between the toes. Then the skin grows flaking red, and itches terribly.

TREATMENT. Wash the infected feet with warm water. Rub it over the affected areas with your finger. Soak the feet in ten parts of very hot water and one part of Nerville's. Then follow by a full-strength application of Nerville's to the irritated parts. All dealers in medicine sell Nerville's.

FEBRUARY MEETING

The Fairview Women's Institute met at the home of Mrs. Annie Currie on Thursday, Feb. 22th with an attendance of eight members and one visitor.

The President presided and meeting opened by singing Institute Carol and repeating the creed in unison.

In the absence of the secretary Mrs. Allison MacMillan was appointed for the evening. Minutes of last meeting were read and approved. A letter was read from the supervisor, and sewing clubs were discussed. It was decided that Mrs. Taylor interview the supervisor about same. It was decided to purchase blinds for schools, also to see about varnish for interior of school.

A paper on the League of Nations was read and the questionnaire was discussed.

Two very interesting contests were conducted by Miss Rita Currie. Luncheon was served by the hostess and meeting adjourned to meet next month at the home of Mrs. Thomas Burdette, roll call to be responded to by a recitation or joke.

FAIRVIEW WOMEN'S INSTITUTE

The regular meeting of the Fairview Women's Institute was held at the home of Mr. Alex MacIsaac on Wednesday, January 24th with an attendance of nine members. The President presided and meeting opened by singing O Canada. Minutes of last meeting were read and approved.

It was decided to fill in the questionnaire on the League of Nations at the next meeting, a paper to be prepared on this subject by Christine MacNevin. Mrs. Edward Currie brought in a report concerning the sewing club for girls, also books on same. This was discussed but as the next meeting was to be held at an early date, it was decided to leave it over until next meeting and find out more particulars about the club.

A contest was conducted by the secretary which proved very interesting as well as instructive. A delicious luncheon was served by the hostess and meeting adjourned to meet next month at the home of Mrs. Annie Currie.
